

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

P R E F A C E.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have pleasure in presenting to the Members the third volume of the "Miscellanea," and the ninth of the publications of the Society, consisting of the "Miscellaneous" parts published for 1897, 1898 and 1899.

The thanks of the Council and Members are due to the contributors of the various papers, who have given so much time and thought to compiling these interesting chapters of the history of Leeds and district.

Perhaps the most attractive and useful features in the present volume are three maps of Leeds dated 1560, 1725 and 1771. The details of these maps are explained in valuable and careful articles which accompany them. The series of papers on villages in the district has been continued, and important documents, such as extracts from "Leeds Manor Rolls (17th century)," "Local Wills (16th century)," "Musters in Skyrack Wapentake (16th century)," "Lay Subsidy (temp. Hen. VIII.)," have been printed.

It has been contended that such long lists of names are 'hard reading,' and on that account unlikely to receive the approbation of Members. The Council have introduced them according to the original purpose of the Society, as works of reference, with the intention, moreover, of preserving historical data of a kind which is liable to destruction, as has been unfortunately proved too often; and they are convinced that by this means an incalculable store of information is provided concerning financial and economic incidents, names of individuals and places, residence and migration of families, and so forth.

The remainder of this volume is devoted to personal records and events closely connected with the history of Leeds.

A most gratifying feature in the work of the Society is the active interest taken in the Excursions; since 1891 thirty have been held, without repeating one itinerary, and especial care has been given to the accounts of the places visited, as the Council hope that Members may find in the publications of the Society a brief guide book to all the places of interest in the district.

Thoresby Society.

REPORT FOR 1898.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have the pleasure to present their Tenth Annual Report. During the year four Life and forty-seven Annual Members have joined the Society, and the number on the Roll at the end of the year is 326, of which fifty are Life and 276 Annual.

The first part of the "Coucher Book of Kirkstall Abbey" has been issued to the members for the year 1896, and further parts of "Miscellanea" and "Leeds Parish Church Registers" to the members for 1897. The "Miscellanea" contained a Map of Leeds of the time of Elizabeth, with depositions in a suit respecting the soke of the Queen's mills having been infringed by the mill of the Manor of Northall, a paper on "Asolf," "Abstract of the Manor Rolls of Leeds, 1650-1662," and copy "Wills," dated early sixteenth century.

During the early part of the year interesting papers were given by Mr. Margerison, on "What we see in an old Church;" by Mr. H. C. Embleton, on "Travels in Burma and the Shan States;" and by Mr. S. J. Chadwick and Mrs. E. K. Clark, on "Old Glass in Dewsbury Church," all of which were much appreciated.

During the summer excursions were made to the Leeds Old Grammar School and St. John's Church, to Wakefield Cathedral, the Chantry on Wakefield Bridge, Heath Old Hall, Sharlston Hall and Methley Church; to Bolton Priory and Barden; and to Hemingborough, Wressle Castle and Howden, which were all very successful and enjoyable.

The Society is much indebted to Canon Scott, Dr. J. W. Walker, the Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, the Rev. A. P. Howes, the Rev. W. Hutchinson, Mr. J. Bilson, and the Rev. J. L. Paton, for courteously receiving the Society and describing the various objects of interest, and to Messrs. W. H. Witherby, F. W. Bedford, and E. K. Clark, who had charge of the excursions.

The Council desire to call the attention of members to the importance of taking advantage of every available opportunity of increasing the Society's Library and collection of objects of interest. Mr. Alderson Smith, of Scarbro', has presented to the Society a valuable collection of MSS. and printed pamphlets which formed part of the collection of Ralph Thoresby, and the Council have indicated their appreciation of the value of this gift by electing Mr. Smith a Life Member. It is well known that many works from Thoresby's Library still exist in various hands, and it is hoped that many of these may ultimately find a permanent home in the Society's Library.

A statement of income and expenditure for the year 1898, prepared in the usual form, is appended to this Report, and it is gratifying to note that, although the year's expenditure includes a printer's bill for a year and a half, the year ended with a balance in the bank of £62 10s. 11d. All the publications due to members have been issued and paid for, except two parts due in respect of the year 1898. These are in an advanced state. The sum in hand and the amount due for subscriptions will be sufficient to defray the cost of printing these. The account includes some extraordinary payments, including the cost of binding fifty sets of the Society's publications, and the purchase of boxes in which to keep the stock.

During the year an effort was made to increase the number of British and Foreign Libraries subscribing to the Society, and with this view the Council offered a set of publications from the commencement to Libraries becoming annual subscribers for the future; and it is satisfactory to record that twenty-two Libraries became members on those terms. The stock of publications is still large, and the Council invite all members who have not already done so to complete their sets. It will be seen that the amount received under this head in the year 1898 was £29 15s. 5d.

The Council thankfully acknowledge the gifts of a water-colour drawing of the interior of the Leeds Commercial Buildings from Mr. Henry Inchbold, Old Cropper Shears from Messrs. Buckton & Co., Copy. Plans of the old Leeds Grammar School from Mr. G. W. Atkinson, and of books and prints from Mr. John Scott, Junior, Mr. F. H. Barr, Mr. S. J. Chadwick, Mr. J. R. Ford, Mr. Edmund Wilson, Mr. R. H. Braithwaite, and Mr. G. H. Denison.

Several of the Lay Subsidies for Skyrack and Morley, dated 16th and 17th centuries, have been copied for the Society, the cost of which has been generously defrayed by some of the members.

Lectures.

Meetings were held in the Society's Rooms on the following dates :—

On Tuesday, February 8th, Mr. S. Margerison exhibited an admirable series of views, which dealt with the exteriors of churches of all parts of England, and he accompanied the lantern slides with a very full description of the Development of Church Architecture from the earliest examples.

On Thursday, February 17th, Mr. H. C. Embleton described his travels in Burma and the Shan States, in illustration of which he showed curiosities ancient and modern, and added a number of most interesting lantern slides.

On Thursday, March 10th, Mr. S. Margerison completed his study of "What we see in an old Church." This evening he confined himself to the interiors of churches. His second lecture, if possible, exceeded in interest the first. The views were again arranged in chronological order, and were taken on this occasion mainly from churches in the Eastern counties. If it were possible, it would be of exceptional value to have the prints of these two series mounted and placed in two albums, to remain in the possession of the Thoresby Society.

On Wednesday, March 30th, Mr. S. J. Chadwick, F.S.A., of Dewsbury, read an interesting and instructive paper regarding the Old Glass in the Parish Church of that town (see Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, vol. xv., part 58, p. 211). As is well known, the parish of Dewsbury is a very old one. The existing church presents many features of deep interest to the antiquary. Probably none excite his veneration more than the old glass in some of the windows. Dodsworth, the celebrated antiquary, who visited Dewsbury in 1618, has given an account of this glass, from which it is gathered that there were then LEEDS OLD GRAMMAR SCHOOL AND CHURCH OF ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST.

MAY 19th, 1898.

IN view of the imminent extinction of an old landmark by the removal of the Leeds Grammar School buildings in North Street, the members of the Thoresby Society gathered there in considerable force on May 19, to take what may be a last look at the premises. What remains of the school built in 1624 is scarcely equal to one-half of the structure, and, judging from appearances, would scarcely stand the ordeal of being carried to a more removed ground, and there set up with any idea of harmonious preservation of its real features.

A brief description was given by Councillor S. Denison, with the assistance of Mr. G. W. Atkinson, surveyor to the Pious Uses Trust, who furnished drawings from original plans. Some little controversy arose as to the period when the library, which has a very modern appearance, was erected. Architecturally, it is a copy of late fifteenth century work, and, like the school itself, is constructed of Bramley Fall sandstone. Its chief feature is a well-preserved oriel window. As near as possible, the school proper runs north and south; but an apparent break in the walls, and some variations in the roofing, indicate that the southerly half was an extension of the original structure, having been built probably with the porch in 1823, the date cast on the bell taken from the belfry. According to Thoresby and Whittaker, a library was erected in 1692 by Godfrey Lawson, an alderman and ex-Mayor of Leeds, and at that time one of the trustees. But there is a well-defined plan in the possession of the Pious Uses Trustees, bearing date 1792, and on it there is nothing to indicate the existence of a library. The inference may therefore be drawn, that the existing building is not the library erected by Mr. Lawson, but a structure of more recent date, and at present not at all accurately identified.

After inspecting what remains of the old Grammar School, the members paid a visit to the Church of St. John the Evangelist, close at hand, and erected in the reign of Charles I. by the same generous founder—John Harrison, merchant and alderman. Canon Scott, vicar of St. John's, received the visitors, and explained the interesting Jacobean and Renaissance details, together with the effects of the restoration in 1868. So much of the fabric needed repair at that period, that it was proposed to pull it down; but by the advice of Sir Gilbert Scott it was preserved, and a thorough restoration was effected,—“in as conservative a spirit,” the vicar observed, “as could be expected at the height of the Gothic revival.” There was, he added, no other church in England in which every bit of the decorative work was of the same period, and the very best of its kind. It is hoped that a complete description will appear in a later number of the Miscellanea.

WAKEFIELD, HEATH OLD HALL, SHARLSTON HALL AND METHLEY CHURCH.

MAY 21st, 1898.

THE inclement weather in no way hindered members of this Society from carrying out the extensive programme provided for them by Mr. Sydney Kitson. At Wakefield Cathedral they were met by Mr. J. W. Walker, F.S.A., who, by the aid of a series of ingenious diagrams, explained the growth of the building. Of the Norman church nothing remains but masonry in a blocked-up staircase at the south-west corner of the south chancel aisle, and the bases of the columns of the north nave arcade belong to a narrow aisle built in the middle of the twelfth century. The main part of the building as it now stands is of the Perpendicular Period. The present tower was built ten feet to the west of the existing church, and on its completion was connected to the main building by the erection of a bay. The beautiful screen, which springs from fifteenth century panel work, as the churchwardens' accounts show, was carved in 1634. In these is recorded the expense of a visit on their part to St. John's Church of Leeds, with the result that work of striking similarity may be here observed. An organ, which was presented by the great Earl of Strafford, on that account was probably destroyed by the Parliamentarians in 1643.

Mr. Walker also described the Chapel on the Bridge. The present structure, in spite of its weathered appearance, dates only from the time when it was wholly rebuilt by Sir Gilbert Scott. The original was placed upon the bridge in 1357, and it is quite an error to suppose that it was erected as a memorial of the battle in 1461. It was sold in 1549, and restored to its religious purposes only in 1842. The style of the building, as replaced, is the most flamboyant Decorated.

The party then drove to Heath Old Hall, which was open to them through the kindness of the present occupier. In this fine Elizabethan house were noted the imposing front, the oak-panelled solar, the long gallery now divided by partitions, the state-room with stone fire-place curiously carved to represent the fate of Jezebel, and the admirable plaster ceilings on which are moulded the arms of John Kaye, the builder. A charming view from the leads included the Jacobean water tower, the columbarium, and the watch tower, the bowling green, and a stone terrace.

Another good specimen of Elizabethan architecture was visited in Sharlston Hall. Though built at the same time, it afforded an interesting contrast. On the timber porch the following inscription is carved, now sorely defaced by the weather:—"In three things is God and man well pleased—the good loving of brethren, the love of neighbours, man and wife of one consent. In the name of the Lord this house was begun, and by His provision finished and done. By John Fleming Cuthbert, and Dorothy his wife, whose souls I wish to have angelic life. In Anno Dom., 1574." The great attraction of the place consists in the contemporary garden-house on the wall overlooking the village green.

Tea was served at the Rose and Crown at Methley, when votes of thanks were passed to the lady and gentlemen who described the various points of interest.

The Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, the rector of Methley, pointed out the symbols on the roof trusses of St. Oswald's Church, Methley, calling particular attention to St. Peter's emblem, the sword piercing an ear. He described the Waterton Chapel, with tombs of Sir Robert Waterton (died 1424) and his wife. Lionel Lord Welles (died 1461 at Towton, as leader of the Lancastrian forces) and his wife Cicely Waterton, in whose memory the chapel was enriched with glass and ornamental roof—a piece of very fine work. The window, composed of fragments of perpendicular glass, still remaining after many restorations, was described by Mrs. E. K. Clark. By comparison of the present condition with a description by James Fowler in 1873, she pointed out that there had been considerable loss. The glass is Late Perpendicular, recognised by its general brilliancy, lack of symbolism, and the formal treatment of accessories, e.g. canopies, &c.

BARDEN TOWER AND BOLTON PRIORY.

THE twenty-third excursion, and the second of the three arranged for this year, took place on Saturday afternoon. The weather was certainly not propitious, but the enthusiasm of the society's members is invariably proof against rain, and a party numbering about thirty-three left for Bolton Abbey station, where rain and open conveyances met them. Mr. W. H. Witherby, M.A., acted as guide, and the party at once drove to Barden Tower. An hour was spent here in thoroughly investigating this interesting building—or rather its ruins—a lucid history and description being given by Mr. Witherby. In 1311 Barden Tower was a small fortified keeper's lodge—one of six in the forest of Barden and Burnsall. It was about 1485 that the Barden Lodge was converted into a residence by Henry, Lord Clifford, the tenth Lord of the Castle and Manor of Skipton. His father, John, Lord Clifford, was deprived of the estates in the first year of the reign of Edward IV., during the wars of the Roses, the Cliffords being of the Lancastrian party. Henry, then five years old, was taken into Cumberland, and brought up, his mother being dead, in the family of a shepherd. After the accession of Henry VII., and the reconciliation of the two parties, the Cliffords, like other disinherited families, were restored to their inheritance, and Henry, with the manners and education of a shepherd, after twenty-one years' seclusion, came into the possessions of his ancestors. Brought up with simple tastes, "far from the madding crowd," he preferred the solitude of Barden to life in his ancestral castles. "The Shepherd Lord" spent the whole of the reign of Henry VII., and the first years of that king's son, in his retreat; but in 1513, when sixty years old, he was appointed to a principal command over the army which fought at Flodden. He survived the battle of Flodden Field ten years, and died in 1523, aged seventy. His son, first Earl of Cumberland, occasionally resided at Barden; and until the later days of the third Earl the Tower seems never to have been wholly neglected by the family. The fourth and fifth Earls never inhabited it, and when it came into the hands of Lady Anne Clifford it was a ruin. By the death of George, third Earl of Cumberland, there was a great division in the family. The earldom went to Francis, his only brother, and the titles of baronage to his daughter and heiress, Lady Anne. An inscription, still over the principal doorway on the south, records the restoration of the Tower in 1658 by this lady. It has been in ruins about a hundred years; the eastern portion, however, has been inhabited within the last half century.

After leaving Barden Tower, the party, by way of Barden Bridge, Launds House, Deer Park, and the Wooden Bridge, drove to the Priory church, the particulars here being explained by the rector of the parish, the Rev. A. P. Howes. The church was founded in 1154, the manor of Bolton having been granted to the Prior and Canons of Embsay a few years before by William de Meschines and Cecilia, his wife. The latter was a daughter of Robert Romilly, a Norman, to whom estates, including Bolton, were granted by William the Conqueror. Her husband was a descendant of Earl Edwin, a Saxon Earl, the former owner. The Prior and Canons were "canons regular" of the Augustinian order, instituted for men in holy orders. The date of the incomplete tower is 1520. The style is Perpendicular. The original west front is twelfth century. The architecture of the interior of the nave is early English. The nave has been used for services since its foundation. It has, therefore, never been restored, as is popularly supposed. The length is 88ft., width 48ft., height 60ft. In the ruined choir should be noticed the intersecting Norman arches, the remains of Early English windows, and the richly ornamented arch into the Clifford chantry. The transepts had eastern aisles. On the south side of the church were the domestic buildings; the ruined archway by the end of the south transept led by a broad passage into the chapter-house. The inside length of the choir is 115 feet, including the width of the transept, which is 123 feet long.

After passing a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Howes, the members proceeded to the Devonshire Arms where justice was done to a substantial tea. Dr. Cameron presided (in the absence of the president), and a vote of thanks to the guide for his careful arrangement of the excursion was passed. Leeds was reached at about half-past nine.

HOWDEN, WRESSLE AND HEMINGBOROUGH.

JULY 23rd, 1898.

A NUMEROUS party of the members of the Thoresby Society left Leeds on July 23rd, at 1.22 p.m., for Selby, whence they drove to Howden. The party, who had the advantage of the skilled guidance of Mr. J. Bilson, F.S.A., was received by the Rev. W. Hutchinson. The church of St. Peter was given to the Prior and Convent of Durham at the end of the eleventh century, and was made collegiate in 1267, with five prebends, a sixth being added in 1279. The large gritstones which may be noticed in the walls of the nave were probably re-used from an earlier church. About the middle of the thirteenth century, the re-building of the church was commenced with the transepts (as at Hedon; Holy Trinity, Hull; and Patrington), for the transepts could be erected without seriously interfering with the use of the church. After the erection of the transepts and the lower part of the crossing, a more ambitious building scheme than was contemplated at first was adopted for the nave, involving lofty arcades and clerestory. Signs of continuous progress in style are to be observed in the change of tracery in the windows of the transepts and nave aisles, from the simple geometric designs of the former to the approach to flowing tracery in the windows at the west end of the nave aisles. In the capitals a similar progress is to be noted; those of the transepts and crossing are circular with octagonal abaci, those further west are octagonal throughout. The west front, which is justly celebrated as one of the best works of its period, has blind arcades both externally and internally, beneath the fine west window, which has a crocketed pediment, and is flanked by hexagonal turrets. A passage in the Chronicle of Lanercost speaks of the choir as commenced before 1272, but the erection of the present magnificent choir can scarcely have been completed before 1320. This fine and rich work, which cannot be too much admired, should be compared with the choir which the monks of Selby had already commenced there, though the choir of Selby was apparently not completed until some time after that of Howden. The beautiful chapter house was built at the end of the fourteenth century. The central stage of the tower was erected partly from funds left by the will of Bishop Skirlaw, and the upper part was added in the fifteenth century. In the Saltmarshe Chapel there are three effigies; one a cross-legged knight, a Saltmarshe, of the end of the thirteenth century; the two others represent Sir John Metham and his wife Sibil, the effigy of the lady being cross-legged. West of the south porch is the remarkable school house, which probably dates from the early part of the sixteenth century, and is still used as the Grammar School.

Following afternoon tea in the open Market Place the party started for Wressle Castle. The castle was erected towards the end of the fourteenth century by Thomas Percy, Earl of Worcester, who was Hotspur's uncle, and filled many offices of state under Richard II. and Henry IV. He took part in the Percy rebellion of 1403, and was beheaded after the battle of Shrewsbury. Leland gives a full description of the place in the reign of Henry VIII. He mentions "a basse courte of tymbre. The castelle it self is motid aboute on three partes. In the castelle be only five towers, one at eche corner almost of like biggenes. The gate-house is the five, having five longginges yn high. Three of the other towers have four highes in longginges. The four conteinith the Bottery, Pantery, Pastery, Lardery, and Kechyn. The house," he continues, "is one of the most propre beyound Trente." Only the south front now remains, but the buildings originally surrounded a quadrangle, with a tower at each corner, and a gateway tower, probably in the centre of the east front. The small detached building shows the corner, and therefore the extent, of the original quadrangle. The first floor of the south-east tower was the chapel, the altar and piscina of which still remain. The first floor of the south-west tower is occupied by a large room described as once having excellent woodwork. This has disappeared, but the fixing holes are still visible. On the first floor of the building between these two towers was a hall, and there seems to have been a larger hall in the western range. In this large house the Percies kept great state; in the household book of the fifth earl as many as 229 persons are mentioned, though the book seems to refer more particularly to the house at Leconfield. The order for demolition, dated April 17th, 1650, was quoted at length. Instructions were given "to throw down all the side wherein the hall stands, leaving only the south side." The south front was occupied until 1796, when it was burnt out.

The party then drove to Hemingborough, and were received by the Rev. S. L. Paton. There was a church here at the time of the Conquest. Originally rectorial, it was made collegiate in 1426. The college was dissolved in the first year of Edward VI. Attention was directed to the thinness of the walls, pierced (about 1170) by the two eastern bays of the nave arcades, to the great height of the original roof in proportion to the width of the nave, and to the occasional appearance of large blocks of gritstone in the midst of magnesian limestone, and Mr. Bilson suggested that there were indications that the eastern part of the nave represented the nave of the pre-Conquest church. The detached pillar in the north transept presents a difficult problem. Attention was particularly called to the twelfth century font, the beautiful carving on the screen behind the choir stalls, and the excellent woodwork at present exiled to the vestry.

Subsequently the visitors drove to Selby, and had tea at the Londesborough Arms, where a very hearty vote of thanks was accorded, on the motion of the President (Mr. Edmund Wilson), seconded by Dr. Bodington, to Mr. Bilson, for the full and careful descriptions which he had given of the most interesting buildings they had visited.

Thoresby Society.

REPORT FOR 1899.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have the pleasure to present their Eleventh Annual Report. During the year one Life and fifteen Annual Members have joined the Society, and the number on the Roll at the end of the year is 331, of which fifty are Life and 281 Annual.

Further parts of the "Miscellanea" and "Leeds Parish Church Registers" have been issued to the members for the year 1897. The "Miscellanea" contained papers on "A Roman Milestone found at Castleford," on "Thoresby's Pedigree," and on "Cossins and Jeffrey's Plans of Leeds," also a copy of a "Skyrack Subsidy Roll for 1545," and copies of local "Wills," dated 1521-26.

During the early part of the year papers were read before the Society by Mr. Margerison, on "What we see in an old Church;" by Mr. Percy Robinson, on "Old Leeds;" and by Mr. Witherby, on "The Pilgrimage of Grace." In November papers were read by Mr. G. Bulmer, on "Architectural Studies in Yorkshire;" and by Mr. J. L. Russell, on "British Urns found at Todmorden;" all of which were much appreciated.

During the summer excursions were made to Bingley Parish Church, Gawthorpe Hall, Riddlesden Hall, Kildwick Church and Skipton Church, to Adel Church, to Steeton Hall, Monk Fryston Church, Ledsham Church, and Ledstone Hall, all of which were very successful and enjoyable. At the Adel excursion a sum was collected from members and handed to the Rector for the purpose of repairing and re-arranging the Museum, which contains many objects of archæological interest.

The Society is much indebted to Archdeacon Danks, the Rev. H. Cooke, Mr. W. A. Brigg, Mr. H. Speight, the Rev. W. H. Draper, Mr. John Bilson, Mr. J. R. Ford, Mr. G. H. Wheler, and Mr. Hartley, for courteously receiving the Society, and describing the various objects of interest, and to Messrs. S. Denison, E. K. Clark, F. W. Bedford, and J. N. Barran, who had charge of the excursions.

The Council gratefully acknowledge gifts of a number of pen and ink sketches of Old Leeds from Mr. Percy Robinson, and Netlam and Francis Giles' Plan of Leeds from Mr. Clifford Dunn.

The nett increase in members during the year has only been small, therefore the Council appeal to the members to assist them in obtaining new members, so that the usefulness and prosperity of the Society may not diminish.

Lectures.

THIS, the second series of lectures, was held in the year 1899, according to a decision of council, in order to avoid the crush of engagements always prevailing at the beginning of the year. The 1900 session will, therefore, be in November and December, 1900.

The first meeting of the session was held on the evening of November 6th, when Mr. G. B. Bulmer, F.R.I.B.A., read a paper referring to Ecclesiastical and Domestic Architecture in this county, illustrated by lantern slide reproductions from the author's drawings.

Of church work there were some interesting studies of the Jacobean pulpits at St. John's, Leeds, and S. Alkeld's, Giggleswick, and a font cover at St. Mary's, Kippax, a crucifix at Sherburn, a stall end at Wensley, the rood loft at Hubberholme, an arcade at Easby Abbey, a cloister door at Coverham Abbey, and an oak chest, probably an Easter tomb, at Cowthorpe.

Domestic work was represented by the curious fireplaces at Altofts Hall and the Swan Inn, Knottingley, a bay window at Kiddall Hall, the principal entrance to King James' Palace at York, the unique entrance gate at Knostrop Hall, with stone arm-chairs at the top of the steps, and a good doorway at Skipton Castle, showing heraldic carving. The drawings were made from sketches and dimensions taken direct from the various subjects, and are therefore accurate representations, having a specific value to the antiquarian as well as the architect.

The subjects selected embraced specimens extending from the early work of the Normans to the semi-classic work of the Jacobean period, and form a valuable collection of items of Yorkshire architecture gleaned from a plenitude of similar subjects to be found within the area of the county.

On Monday evening (November 27th), Dr. J. Lawson Russell, M.B., described before the members of the above Society a ring barrow near Todmorden, the excavation of which he had undertaken. Below the top of a ridge called Whirlaw, which overlooks this town, and just above a striking outcrop of millstone grit called Butt Stones, lie a few acres of pasture land, called Blackheath. In this field was situated the ring investigated by Dr. Russell. The annular mound had been reduced by ploughing at some date not now remembered, but was sufficiently clear to be measured: it was found to be about 100 feet in diameter: trenches were cut running north and south, east and west, the ground removed as far as the original surface of the clay soil, which had never been disturbed. In the centre of the circle was found an urn, surrounded at a distance of 2 feet by deposits, in two of which were other urns; at a distance of 12 feet from the centre on the east side of the north and south line were other deposits. About 16 feet from the centre were two pits, one in the north-east, one in the south-east quadrant, and near to the latter a curiously baked surface. A group of urns lay in line going east from the centre, and round this group were placed flat stones on their edges. In the north-east quadrant, also at the west and east sides of the circle, were surfaces bearing the appearance of broken pottery disintegrated and closely trodden down. Curious cairns of stone had been placed just inside the containing ring-mound, which was found to make accurately the north, east, south and west points. The urns were of the usual kind assigned to British origin, rough, badly baked, innocent of the potter's wheel, marked with oblique lines, with thickened rim. The central urn measured 11 inches in height, rim $3\frac{1}{4}$ inches deep, 8 inches diameter at the top, $9\frac{1}{2}$ inches diameter at base of rim. An incense cup was pierced with two holes, and contained two bronze implements, a knife and a pin. In all there were seven "cinerary urns," one "food vessel," four "incense cups," and fragments indicating in all twenty-three interments. There were instances of a cinerary urn containing an incense cup and covered with an urn similar to the "food vessels." There were fragments of bone (human) in certain of the urns, in some cases accompanied with charcoal, in some cases without charcoal or sign of burning. Two of the urns yielded flints. One bone pin was found measuring $5\frac{1}{2}$ inches, although its point had disappeared. In addition to the bronze implements (an awl and possibly a knife, there was found a number of beads of baked clay, of jet, and of red amber, a piece of fine sandstone conjectured to be a whetstone and a quantity of worked flints, flint splinters, and one leaf-shaped arrow-head, which bore signs of heat.

Dr. Russell concluded his account by saying that the most finely made and most ornamented urns were set upright in the ground, and round them were placed thin flat stones on edge, and with remarks on the general arrangement of this remarkable ring barrow.

The lecture was illustrated with some most admirable slides. A note was added by Mr. E. Kitson Clark on excavations at Pule Hill, near Marsden, conducted by himself, on the site of discoveries by Mr. G. Marsden. The summit of this remarkable hill forms a pointed end to a gradually rising ridge, and a section of the 6in. ordnance map was shown on the screen. Four urns, viz. three food vessels and one incense cup had been found on the spot, two of the food vessels of extremely rude character, one of bowl-shape, with four projections to form a base. On this vessel there had been two pierced projections; one had been severed from its seat, the fracture showing that these projections had not been drawn up from the clay of the urn, but superimposed. A parallel was drawn between this and one of the other urns, which also had two similar projections; and remarks were made on the fact that the distance between the projections was in the bowl-shaped urn about one-third only of the circumference. Slides were exhibited showing portions of base (calcined fragments of various parts of the human skeleton, such as skull, lower jaw, elbow, humerus, etc.), of flint chippings, a scraper, and an arrow head. The whole site had been subsequently dug over and three holes discovered, sunk about one foot and a-half into the rock, which underlay a layer of peat and debris of shattered rock surface: the dimensions of the holes about three feet long by two feet wide. Photographs of the site and of the holes were thrown on the screen, and the meeting terminated with general remarks concerning the manner and period of the interments (British). It is to be noted that this was the first lecture of the Thoresby Society, which was given at the earlier hour of 5.30 p.m. See report in Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, 1900.

Excursions.

BINGLEY CHURCH, GAWTHORPE HALL,
RIDDLESDEN HALL,
KILDWICK CHURCH AND SKIPTON CHURCH.

MAY 27th, 1899.

TRAIN was taken to Bingley, and there Mr. H. Speight described the church. Attention was mainly directed by him to the stone which bears a Runic inscription. The stone is a four-sided trough, the front, which is inscribed, longer than the opposite side. The material, gritstone of the district on three sides; on outside rude and weak interlaced work; on front inscription, in runes of three lines. Various readings are to be found in Old Bingley, by H. Speight, published by Elliot Stocks, Bingley. This square basin has a hole in one corner. The word Dipstone has been read into one version of the inscription, and is accepted by those who would consider it a font. The stone has also been called the base of a cross; for this purpose, however, it appeared that the sides were too weak and the cavity too irregular. Mr. Speight suggested that the signs of a rebate for a cover encouraged him to see in this most interesting stone a relic chest. At Gawthorpe Hall Mr. Speight gave a history of the ownership. The house, originally built in the time of James I., added to recently, was admired, and the beautiful view from its terrace up the valley of the Aire much enjoyed.

After visiting the old vicarage (early seventeenth century) the party drove to East Riddlesden Hall (built 1650). This manor has passed through the hands of the well-known Yorkshire families of Romilles, Montaltes, Paslews from Potternewton, Leeds. In the interior are rooms with excellent panelling, inlaid ornamentation, and plaster ceiling—Jacobean—which require careful preservation, and would merit reproduction. The outside of this hall is remarkable and attractive—see Bradford Antiquary, April, 1892 (W. A. Brigg).

The church at Kildwick was described by Mr. W. A. Brigg, to whom the Society was indebted for an account of the possessors of Riddlesden Hall. This church, called the Lang Kirk of Kildwick, is of remarkable length—its roof covered with heavy Yorkshire tile; it possesses admirable Jacobean woodwork, and owes its remarkable plan to the fact that it lies along the side of a very considerable slope, so that any increase in size was necessarily gained by lengthening.

The church at Skipton was visited after tea. Foremost in interest was a brass of 1520—other brasses are insertions. Noticeable: the altar stone, with dedication crosses; a silver cross on inside of roof (canonry of Bolton); the square recess eastward of the three sedilia introduced, it may be, when the church was lengthened; the Poke work of 1806 about the gallery at the west end. A plan of this church would be of great value, and provide material for a very interesting history of development. Described by the rector, the Rev. H. Cooke. Guide, S. Denison.

VISIT TO ADEL CHURCH.

JUNE 22nd, 1899.

MEMBERS of the society drove up to Adel, where Mr. J. Bilson, F.S.A., gave a very full and interesting description of the church, which it is hoped he will put into a more permanent form in the Miscellanea of the Society. Mr. E. Kitson Clark, F.S.A., gave some notes on the relics in the small Museum, which stands opposite the churchyard gate.

In consequence of the dilapidated condition of portions of this building a subscription was made for the purpose of putting the place in better repair, and ensuring that there should be sufficient light in the interior, without running risk from the sticks and stones of the passer-by. £4 4s. was collected, and the committee have the pleasure to report that strong plate-glass has been inserted in the windows, the interior has been thoroughly cleaned, a strong shelf put up, and a skylight is to be inserted.

STEETON HALL, MONK FRYSTON, LEDSHAM, AND LEDSTONE HALL.

JULY 29th, 1899.

STEETON HALL.

STEETON HALL, though considerably altered during the last thirty years, is one of the most interesting houses of the fourteenth century which Yorkshire possesses. In arrangement of plan it must have been very similar to Markenfield Hall, which is of about the same date. It belongs to the transitional period of English domestic architecture, in which the defensive features of the Norman castle were being transformed into the ease and security of the Elizabethan country mansion. The high enclosing wall, though here thin and of not much defensive value, and massive gateway, had not yet disappeared: the solar and other principal rooms were, no doubt, as usual, on the first floor, with vaulted "cellars" under. There are no traces of the original stairs, and all that exists of the older house are two fine vaulted chambers on the ground floor level and some remains of offices.

There is a very perfect gateway of the latter half of the fourteenth century. It has two archways, the larger being covered with a ribbed vault and the smaller with a plain barrel vault.

Above the gateway are two chambers, the smaller one being gained by an external staircase, and the other by a newel staircase partly projecting beyond the wall.

One of the rooms has a very perfect chimney continued up above the parapet. It is probable that some of the corbels carrying the projection of the chimney, and two used to support the ribs of the vaulting over the gateway, are Norman corbels re-used.

Steeton was held by the Reygates from Henry III. down to 1375, when John de Reygate, the last male representative of the family, died. There is very little doubt that the gateway was built by the Reygates, although there is no documentary evidence to prove it. John de Reygate's sister married William Clarel, of Aldwark, and their grand-daughter Elizabeth married Sir Richard Fitzwilliam. She died in 1503.

Some of the coats-of-arms on the corbels supporting the parapet have been deciphered by Mr. Bilson and Mr. Ellis, but the greater part have not been identified. The first on the left on the inner front is of the Reygate family, the next probably belongs to the Wentworths, and the seventh probably to the Hastings. The first on the left on the outer side is thought to be of the Langton family, and the second and third to the Reygates.

MONK FRYSTON CHURCH.

THIS church belonged to the Benedictine monks of Selby and so became Monk Fyryton. The earliest building of which we can find traces consisted of a nave, of the same size as the present one, a tower, which still remains, and a chancel. These portions are of pre-Conquest date. The eastern window of the tower now opens into the nave, proving that the original roof was very much lower. These belfry windows have mid-wall shafts, and lintels cut into arch forms. During the twelfth century aisles were built on both sides of the church, and the chancel was re-built: the nave arcades and chancel arch are of that period. In the thirteenth century two windows were made in the chancel, one on each side, next to the nave (one has since been removed), and the east window and the ones on each side next to it were added in the fourteenth century. There was formerly a priests' door on the south side. In the fifteenth century another storey was built to the tower, a clerestory to the nave, and a sacristy to the south of the chancel. At the same time windows were inserted in the aisles and west side of the tower. The squints on each side of the chancel arch were formed at the end of the fifteenth or beginning of the sixteenth century. The font belongs to the thirteenth century. The altar rail is dated 1664. The corbels supporting the label of the north door bear coats-of-arms, the one on the right—chevron between three mullets—belonging to the Hammonds, of Scarthingwell, and the other to Philippa, Queen of Edward II.

LEDHAM CHURCH.

THIS church was very similar in plan, and is of about the same date as Monk Fyryton. The pre-Conquest walls of the tower and nave, which are of sandstone, still remain. The building consisted of a western tower, nave and chancel. The nave had a doorway in the centre of its south side with a small window over, and two windows on each side, high up in the wall and very much splayed inwards. These windows and the corresponding ones on the north side can still be distinctly seen. During the twelfth century an upper storey of limestone was added to the tower. In the thirteenth century the chancel was rebuilt. In the fourteenth century a north aisle was built to the nave and chancel, and later additions were made in the fifteenth century in the form of a parapet to the tower and windows in the aisles. The tower has an interesting doorway with carved hood-moulding continued down the jambs.

The church contains monuments to Lady Bowles, Lady Elizabeth Hastings (died 1739) and Sir John Lewis. In former publications of the Thoresby Society will be found the following references to Ledsham Church:—In a will dated December 16th, 1519, Robert Amerson, of Fairburn, leaves “to the repair of the images of the 12 Apostles (Led. Ch.) iii^s iiij^d.”

“Will of Isabell Pigott, of Ledsham, item: To the roode lofte ii^d. Item: to making of a window in the kirk vi^s viii^d. (Proved January 8, 1521-2.)”

“Will of W^m Hewet, of Ledsham, dated 30 March, 1531. ‘Also I bequeith to the leight before Roid xij^d., and to the leight before o^r Lady xij^d.’”

LEDSTONE HALL.

THE earliest portion of the house is attributed to the sixteenth century. The greater part of the existing buildings were erected by the Earl of Stafford (temp. Charles I.) and Sir John Lewis (temp. Commonwealth). Ledstone Hall was for a time the residence of Lady Elizabeth Hastings.

REPORT FOR 1896.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have the pleasure to present their Eighth Annual Report.

During the year eight Life and twenty-three Annual Members have joined the Society, and the number on the Roll at the end of the year is 279, of which forty-five are Life and 234 Annual. It is gratifying to note that thirteen Libraries are now subscribing to the Society. A first portion of the "Calverley Charters" and two parts of the "Leeds Parish Church Registers" have been issued during 1896 (together three parts—two for 1894 and one for 1895), and there are now in the press a third part of "Miscellanea and Index," completing Vol. IV. (for 1895), and a portion of the "Kirkstall Abbey Coucher Book," and another part of the "Leeds Parish Church Registers" for 1896.

On the 28th January, the Rev. Chas. Hargrove, M.A., read a paper to the Society on "The Cistercian Order of Monks"; on February 11th, Colonel Wilson gave a paper on "Old Leeds"; and on the 10th March, Mr. E. K. Clark, M.A., read a paper on "The Roman Wall between Newcastle and Carlisle"; which were all much appreciated by the members present.

In May, June, and July, very successful Excursions were made to Norton Conyers and Tanfield; to Woodsome Hall, Fenay Hall, and Almondbury; and to Bilborough Hall, Nun Appleton Hall, and Bolton Percy.

Sir Reginald Graham, Bart., Mr. Guy Thomas Fairfax, the Bishop of Beverley, Colonel Brooke, Mr. J. A. Brooke, Mr. Angus Holden, and the Clergy of the different churches very courteously received the members and described the various places visited.

The Society have been fortunate in having had presented to them, by Messrs. Whitaker Bros., Messrs. Geo. Depledge & Co., and Mr. T. H. Dodgson, the Bell, dated 1757, which formerly belonged to the White Cloth Hall, and was rung at the opening and close of the Market, and the Society's warmest thanks are due to those gentlemen.

The following figures, giving the number of members elected in each year of the Society's existence, will be interesting as showing its growth:—

The years 1892 and 1896 were years of special energy in the direction of making the Society better known, and it is gratifying to think that the labour expended on this work has been productive. The work done in 1896 has probably not yet produced its full result, as it is believed that the desirability of joining the Society is under consideration at several American and other Libraries. It is believed that as the Publications become better known the number of Library Members will be largely increased. The Council are desirous of including as many members of this class as possible on the Roll, since a Library is a perpetual Life Member who never dies and does not compound. The following is a list of the members of this class already appearing on the Society's Register:—

Public Library of the City of Boston, U.S.A.
 The Royal Library, Berlin.
 Chetham's Library, Manchester.
 Dewsbury Public Free Library.
 The Guildhall Library, London.
 Leeds Public Library.
 Leeds Library.
 Leeds Mechanics' Institution and Literary Society.
 Leeds Church Institute.
 Manchester Free Library.
 Newcastle Literary and Philosophical Society.
 New York State Library.
 Sheffield Public Library.

The most important event of the year, and one which it is hoped will have a beneficial effect upon the future history of the Society, is the securing of permanent premises. Among the objects for which the Society was formed, the first named in the Rules is "The collection and preservation of books, pamphlets, MSS., deeds, engravings, drawings, coins, antiquities, and other objects relating to the town and neighbourhood of Leeds."

Little has been done or could be done in this direction for want of suitable premises. Through the energetic action of the President, this difficulty is now removed. By arrangement with the Yorkshire Archæological Society, the Library and ten other rooms, part of the old Medical School in Park Street, have been secured for a term of years at a moderate rent, with an option of purchasing the whole building; and the Annual Meeting at which this Report will be presented will be the first meeting of the Society held in its new premises.

The Council are glad to be able to record the receipt of valuable additions to their collection since the above premises were secured. Not only has the Bell before referred to been presented to the Society, but several other gifts have been received, including 100 volumes of Local Books presented by Mr. James Miles, Bookseller, a member of the Society.

The Council hope that they will have the co-operation of all the members in securing other additions to their collection. It should not be overlooked that a gift of small intrinsic value individually, when added to other similar contributions, helps to form a valuable collection.

The Council also appeal to members to make the work of the Society better known amongst those interested in the subject. The taking of premises involves a considerable outlay, and though it is believed that the Annual charges in respect of rent, &c., will be largely met by sub-lettings, it will be seen from the Treasurer's Account that the cost of preparing the premises has already entailed an outlay of nearly £50. The Council hope by securing a considerable addition to the number of members to have funds available, not only for the additional outlay entailed, but for the purpose of securing, by purchase, objects of interest which come into the market from time to time.

The Council beg to refer to the question of subscriptions. On the 31st of December, 1896, the subscriptions of no less than thirty-eight members were in arrear, and as the Rules of the Society preclude the issue of Publications to members whose subscriptions are unpaid, want of punctuality largely adds to the labour of the Treasurer.

The Council desire to call attention to the fact that during the year 1896 no less than £37 10s. 9d. has been received in respect of the sale of back Publications. The Council have been anxious from the first to avoid an error frequently committed by similar Societies, who print but a few spare copies of their Publications, so that the Publications for the earlier years soon become out of print. Since the formation of the Society no less than £90 0s. 9d. has been received under this head. The unusually large amount received in 1896 resulted partly from a special letter written to those members only who joined in the fourth year of the Society's existence. The Council hope that more members, who joined after the date of the formation of the Society, will take an early opportunity of completing their sets. The back parts are issued in bound volumes, and early application should be made to the Treasurer for the volumes required.

Excursions.

NORTON CONYERS AND TANFIELD.

MAY 30TH, 1896.

Leaving Leeds by the 1-40 train, members arrived at Ripon about a quarter to three. A pleasant hour was spent at Norton Conyers, that interesting Elizabethan house whose white walls may be seen gleaming among the thick foliage as you pass along the highroad between Tanfield and Ripon. From Sir Reginald Graham himself, who personally welcomed his guests, and from Mr. W. H. Witherby, under whose guidance the excursion was conducted, the visitors learnt much that was interesting about the history of the mansion, which is supposed to have been built in the reign of Henry VIII. The Conyers were the first family known to have held lands in these parts. This family, which it is believed came over with the Conqueror, became very powerful in the North Riding, where they owned extensive territories. A few centuries ago a Conyers married into the Norton family—the family of which Lord Grantley is now the head. From that time not only the lands but the house have been designated Norton Conyers. The Nortons were ardent supporters of Mary Queen of Scots, and of the “old religion,” and played a conspicuous part in the “Rising of the North” of 1569. Richard Norton, then between 70 and 80 years of age, went forth with his eight valiant sons, their purpose, it is understood, being to kill the Regent Murray as he passed Northallerton on his return to Scotland, after the Commission at Westminster in January, 1569; the old man, who had no doubt been out with the pilgrimage of Grace, taking with him the banner which had been used on that occasion. Neither Norton nor his sons ever returned to their home, for the estates were confiscated by the Crown, one of the sons being executed, and the father afterwards dying in exile. The estates were subsequently granted by the Crown to the Musgraves, of Edenhall, Cumberland, and it was by the marriage of the first Sir Richard Graham, of Esk, with the co-heiress of Sir Thomas Musgrave that the Grahams came into possession of the estate. This was the Richard Graham who was a favourite of James I., and who fought at Marston Moor, Naseby, and Edgehill. Tradition tells how Graham fled from Marston Moor, desperately wounded, and was followed to Norton Conyers by Cromwell, who galloped into the hall and up the staircase. The print of a horse's hoof is still to be seen on the staircase, and it was pointed out to the visitors by Sir Reginald Graham, who, though he dismisses the story of Cromwell as a myth, being of opinion that the Protector was never at Norton Conyers, declares that there is no doubt that Sir Richard himself actually rode up the staircase, a conviction in which he is confirmed by a discovery he made among the deeds at Netherby, the Cumberland home of another branch of the family. Both James I. and Charles I. visited Norton Conyers, the former in 1603 and the latter in 1632, and on Saturday the party saw, in "King James's Room," the oak bed in which those two monarchs slept, and passed the closely cropped bowling-green where Charles I. is said to have enjoyed many a game during the five days he was here. Richard Graham was made a baronet by James I., and was succeeded by his eldest son, this branch of the family being the Grahams, of Esk, in Cumberland; the second son also received a baronetcy from Charles, and this line is represented by the present owner of Norton Conyers, the eighth baronet. The family portraits and other pictures, including examples of Vandyke, Sir P. Lely, and Romney, were inspected under the guidance of Sir Reginald, who conducted the visitors over the greater part of the house. Light refreshments were provided for the party, who, before leaving, expressed, through Mr. J. H. Wurtzburg, a Vice-President of the Society, and Mr. Richard Reynolds, their appreciation of their host's kindness. Sir Reginald—who expressed regret that Lady Graham had been prevented by a previous engagement from doing the honours of the house—intimated his desire to become a life member.

Wath Church, where there are many monuments of the Grahams and a defaced brass of the Nortons, was visited, the rector, the Rev. H. R. Hunter, pointing out the main features of the edifice. Then the journey was resumed, and half-an-hour's drive brought the visitors to Tanfield—where the old church and the Marmion Tower close by claimed attention. The tombs of the Marmions in the church are objects of curious interest. The history of the Marmions, whose name is associated with Tanfield, is involved in much obscurity, but it seems to be taken for granted that though not belonging directly to the “Hereditary Champions of England,” of whom Sir Walter Scott wrote, they were a branch of that family. The Rector of West Tanfield (the Rev. F. Earle) told the company that he does not think the Marmions ever lived at Tanfield. Two alabaster figures are supposed to be those of Sir Robert Marmion and his lady. Over their tomb is an iron “horse,” or open canopy, which was used for carrying the pall, and in which there are “prickets” for candles. The Knight’s figure is in an excellent state of preservation, the chain armour, and the collar of S’s being almost perfect. There are the tombs of other knights in chain armour, very much dilapidated, but apparently belonging to the same family. In the north pier of the chancel is a small opening, in regard to which several theories have been advanced, the most generally accepted of which is that it was a place where a temporary altar could be put for the use of the chantry. The Marmion Tower, near the church, and overlooking the river, is a fine piece of work, probably of the Perpendicular period. The oriel window is a beautiful and conspicuous feature of the structure. Leland, describing the building, speaks of a “fair-towered gatehouse and the wall of squared stone.” It was evidently a detached gatehouse, the tower of which was never completed, and the absence of remains in its vicinity leads to the presumption that a castle was never built. From Tanfield the party drove to Ripon, and after tea at the Crown Hotel returned by train to Leeds.

ALMONDBURY CHURCH & CASTLE HILL, FENAY HALL, WOODSOME HALL, AND DEWSBURY.

JUNE 27TH, 1896.

The party numbered about fifty, Mr. W. Braithwaite, assisted by Mr. F. W. Bedford, acting as guide on the occasion. They were met at Huddersfield by Mr. G. W. Tomlinson, F.S.A., late Hon. Secretary of the Yorkshire Archæological Society, and drove to Woodsome Hall, the ancient seat of the Kayes, and one of the most interesting Tudor houses in Yorkshire. Owing to the kindness of the Dowager Countess of Dartmoor access was granted to the terrace and large hall. Upon the terrace a paper communicated by Mr. Tomlinson was read describing the knightly family which held it, and which has now become merged by marriage into the noble family of Legge. In the old hall, with its attractive gallery and wainscoting, rendered striking by the clock and magnificent fireplace, appear the names of Arthur and Beatrix Kaye, and the arms of Kaye and Finchenden quarterly; there is an interesting picture of Arthur Kaye and his family, with the arms of the families with whom they inter-married. The house has been well preserved, and when necessary repairs have been done care has been taken to keep all in character. The old hall, the courtyard, and the outbuildings form a tout ensemble difficult to match and impossible to excel. From Woodsome the party proceeded to Fenay Hall, a 16th century building in the possession of Mr. J. A. Brooke, where Mr. Tomlinson's excellent description claimed the attention of the members. In the dining-room round the top of the wainscot has been inscribed a series of apothegms of a religious, loyal, and admonitory character. In the paper the history of the Fenay family and the subsequent ownership of the house until it passed into the hands of its present possessor was accurately detailed. Mr. Brooke, who had kindly thrown open the house for inspection, added a few words concerning the treatment of the date over the door and the conjectural emendation of two of the apothegms, pointed out the massive oak gables in the courtyard, and the party passed out under a gateway labelled with the legend "Exeat fraus." Aldmondbury Church, dedicated to All Saints', was fully described by the vicar, the Rev. W. F. Norris, who pointed out the Kaye Chapel, and the Beaumont Chapel, and alluded to the inscription which runs round the nave, the words of which are supposed to be addressed from the Cross to the reader. The glass, the tithe maps, the ancient standard measures for corn and wine and ale, and the registers, which had been most carefully treated, were noted. After tea at the Woolpack, Colonel Brooke met the party on the top of Castle Hill. This magnificent position is crowned with earthworks of a singularly interesting character, which were described in a most attractive manner in the scholarly paper then read to the members.

Colonel Brooke said that considering its marvellous position as a place of defence, it was surprising that the real history of Almondbury Castle Hill should only begin in comparatively recent feudal times. The late Dr. Walker, in the course of an interesting paper in the Yorkshire Archæological Journal, based upon extant inquisitions and returns from temp. Ed. I. to James I., remarked there was reason for believing that this had been a place of strength in Saxon, perhaps even in Celtic times, inferences being drawn from the nature of the hill itself. The theory of a Saxon establishment was advocated by Camden and Watson, while Dr. Whitaker (in the history of Leeds) asserted that it was unquestionable. Dr. Walker opposed the "heresy of Camden, who fixed upon the place as the Roman Cambodunum (the station between Mancunium and Calcaria in the itinerary of Antonine). Horsley, in his "Britannia Romana" (published 1732), pronounced also against the claims of Almondbury for this name, and in February 1766, a paper by Mr. Watson was read before the Society of Antiquaries in which he said that the ground had nothing of the Roman taste about it. There had been no coins, altars, or other relics of the people found there, and what was more no Roman military way went near it. Add to this the fact that the plan of the earthworks showed no feature of the universally adopted rules of Roman castrametation and the distance from water,* and the conclusion arrived at was that Almondbury was not a Roman fort, but a Saxon fortification. Arguments could be adduced to show that it was thrown up as a barrier to secure the kingdom of Northumbria from incursions. The Rev. Joseph Hunter (Archæological Journal, xxxii., p. 16) had also pronounced against Almondbury, and the Society over which he (Colonel Brooke) presided claimed to have identified Slack as the site of Cambodunum (vide first paper of the Yorkshire Archæological Journal), and disposed of the claims of Almondbury. The earthworks, as was pointed out, are magnificent; they may be attributed in their present state to Norman times. They occupy a ridge running east and west, practically inaccessible on all sides except the east, and culminating in the western extremity. Three lines are drawn across the ridge; the easternmost (with an entrance) defines the edge of the outer bailey; the mound upon which the lecture was delivered drawn across the ridge divided the outer enclosure from the second court, which in all probability would contain the domestic offices, and be the part of the castle where the life and business of its inhabitants would be carried on. The second court is bounded on the west by a ditch of great depth, cutting off the westernmost and highest point of the hill, which must have been the site of the keep or castle itself and the last place of resort. Some feet down the precipitous sides of the hill a trench and mound surmounted by a palisade would form the line of defence. The feudal home was in all probability a wooden house with foundations only of stone, for little stonework has been found on the hill. After the description of the characteristics of the hill attention was turned to its history. Almondbury was one of the manors conferred by the Conqueror upon Ilbert de Lacy for his services in the subjugation of the Northumbrian kingdom. Almondbury became incorporated in the honour of Pontefract. The story of the erection of the castle by King Stephen is improbable, and it seems preferable to believe that the Lacys, either before 1102 or soon after the restoration (the Lacy's property having been forfeited in 1102), erected the house. Ilbert de Lacy espoused the cause of Stephen, which may have given currency to the story. The manor remained as a part of the Lacy fee until the reign of Edward I., when it was the property of Henry de Lacy, the greatest and best of this illustrious race, who died in 1310, when the estates, by virtue of the marriage of his only surviving daughter, became the possession of Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster. Confiscated upon his rebellion, they were afterwards restored by special Act of Parliament, and passed to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. When Henry of Lancaster ascended the throne in 1399 this manor became Crown property, till, in 1627, it was granted to the ancestor of the present distinguished owner. In the early part of the reign of Edward I., we have returns of charges preferred by the King's Commissioners (1273-4) against the Lord of Almondbury, Henry de Lacy, for offences by himself and his bailiff and officers, and in 1307, in Dodsworth's MSS., is a reference to a former castle of Almondbury. It was suggested that this castle may have been among those destroyed by the command of King Henry II. and his Chancellor Beckett, circa 1155. Inquisitions of 1340, 1425, 1584, 1611 are extant of a most interesting character, in the earliest of which there is mention of a castle which formerly stood at this place. An allusion to the same effect is made in 1584. In conclusion Colonel Brooke expressed a hope that future excavations might elucidate the difficulties which he had pointed out in his paper. From Castle Hill the party was driven to Huddersfield, and arrived in Leeds about 9 p.m.*

BILBOROUGH HALL, NUN APPLETON, AND BOLTON PERCY.

JULY 25TH, 1896.

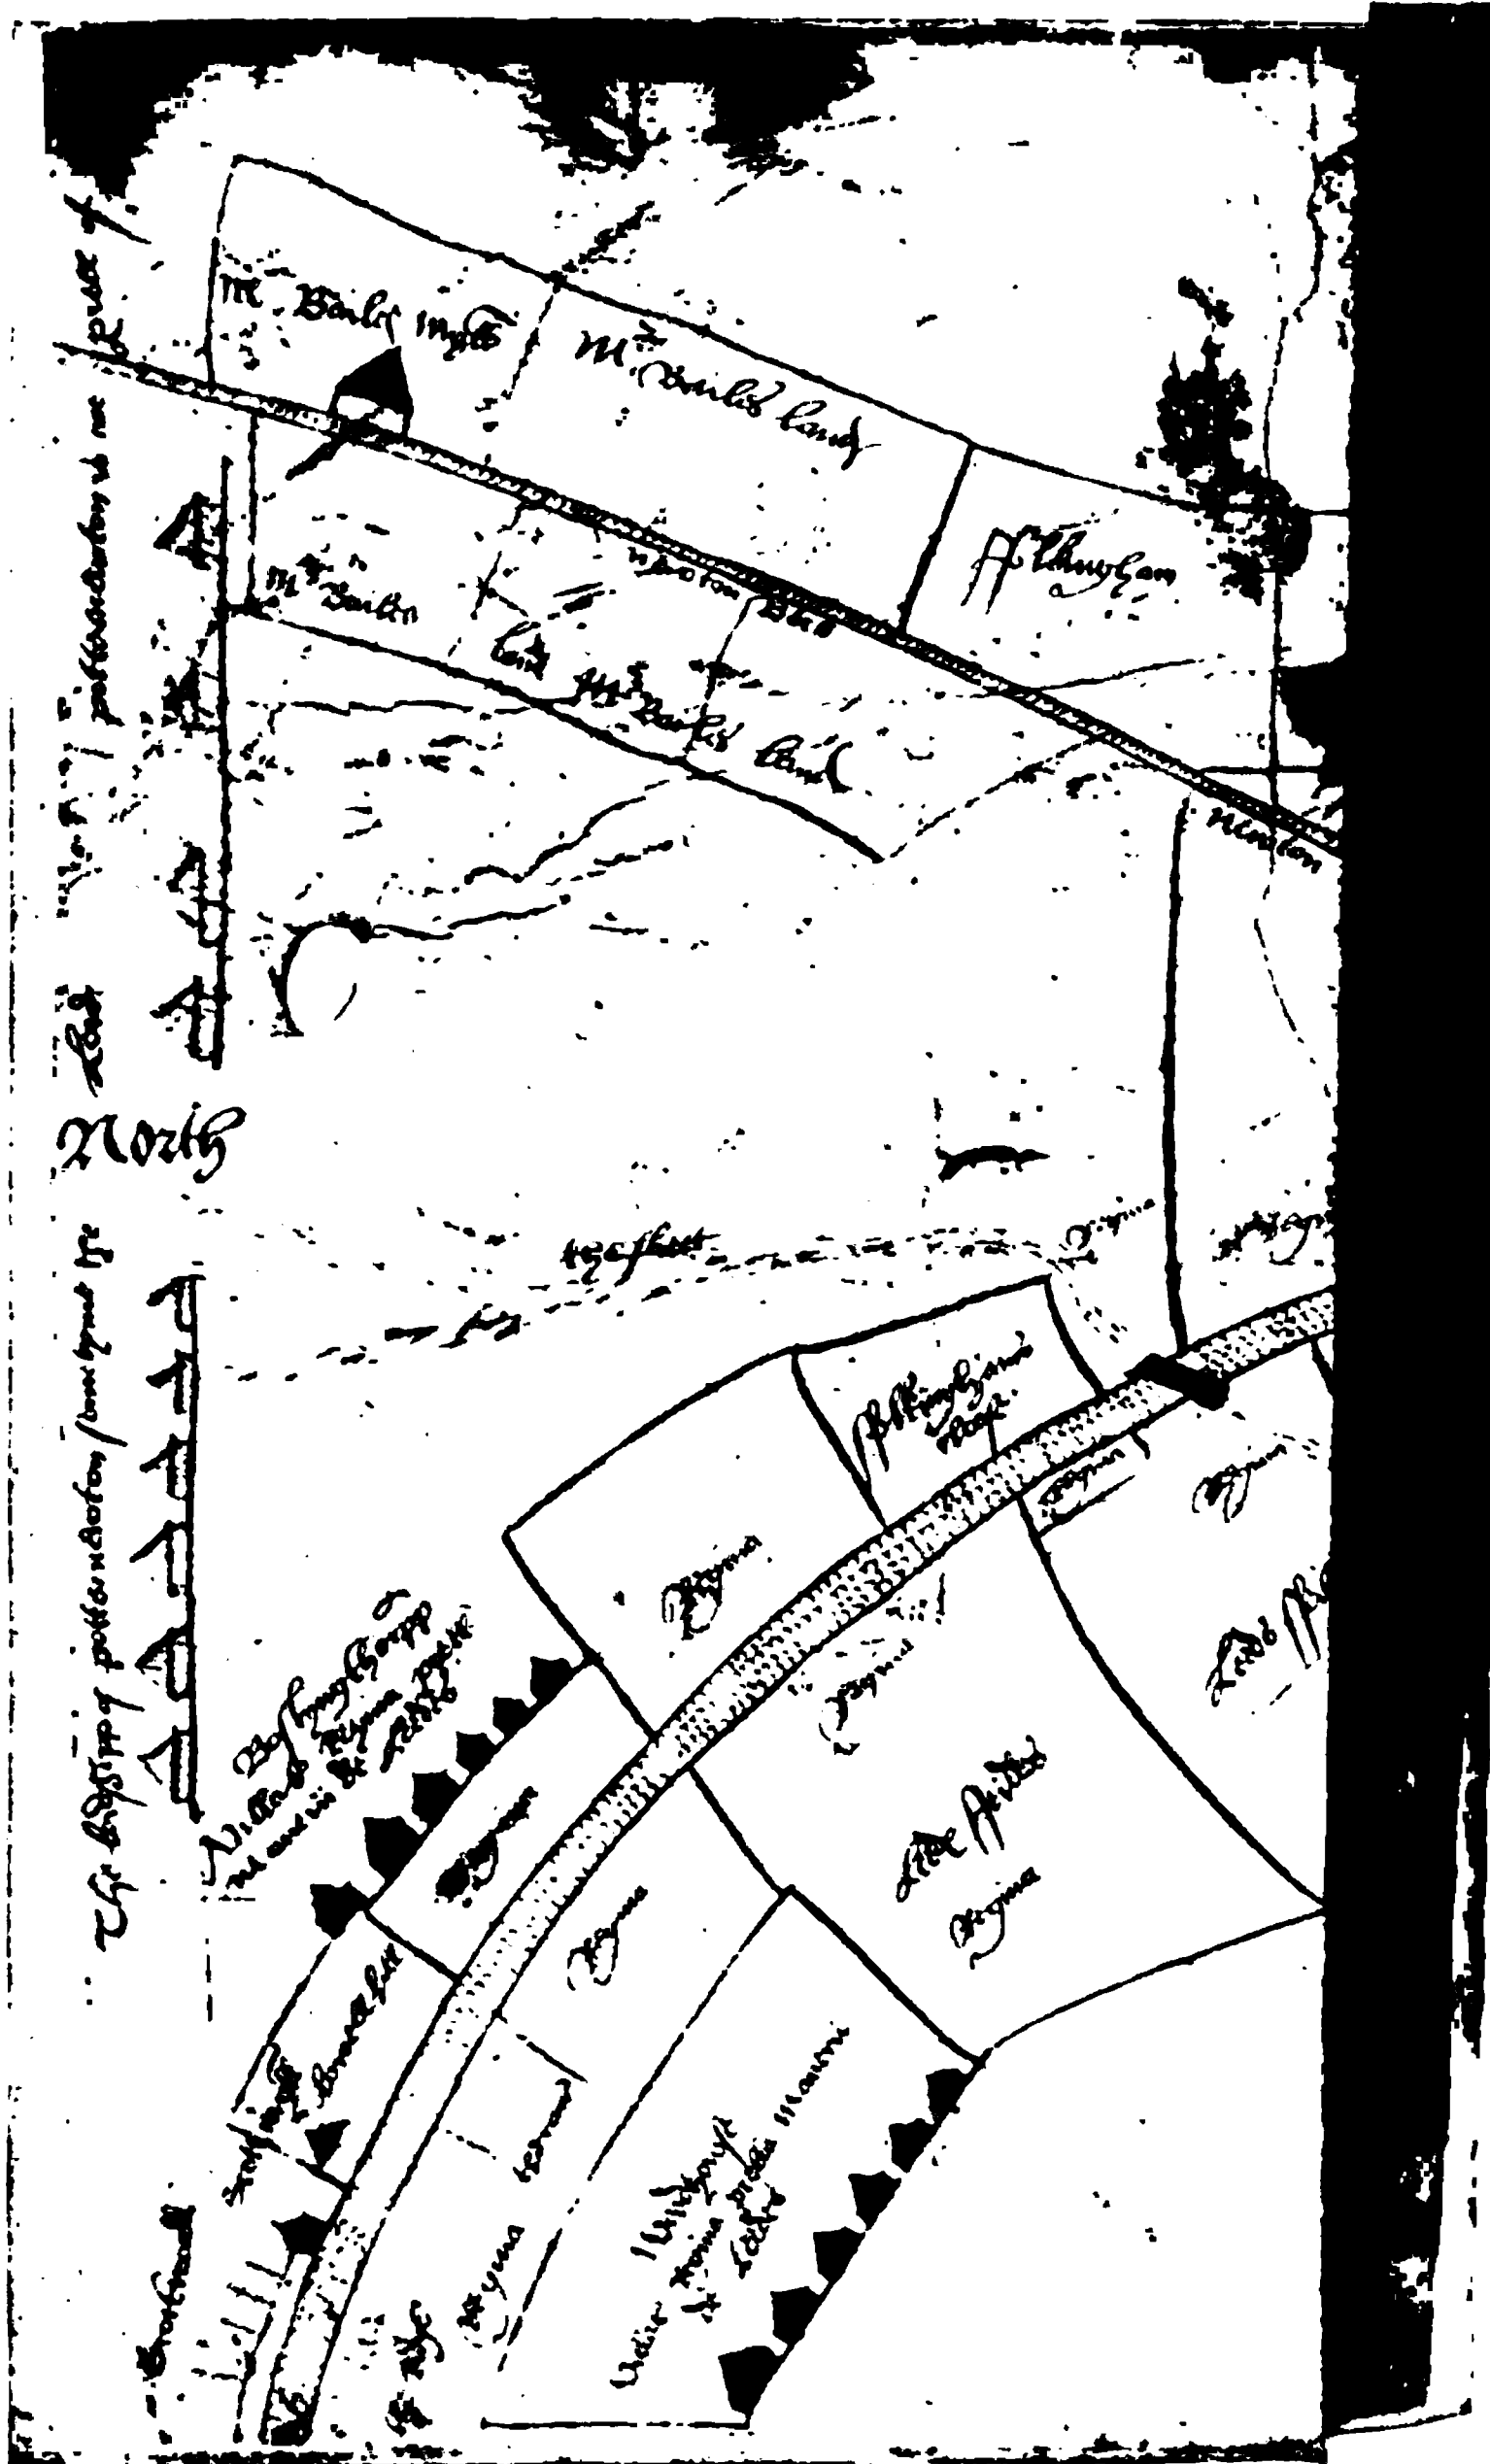

The Thoresby Society devoted their sixteenth excursion to scenes associated with the historic family of Fairfax. The members arrived at three o'clock at Tadcaster, and a start was at once made for marble describes the great soldier as Thomas Lord Fairfax, Baron of Cameron, but makes no mention of his fame in politics and war. The Barony of Cameron, in the Peerage of Scotland, the General got from Charles II. after the restoration.

The leaden sky did not display to advantage the undulating and finely-wooded country through which the members then drove to Nun Appleton, once a mansion of the Lords Fairfax. The ruins of their castle at Steeton had been originally included in the programme, but owing to the loss of time through railway unpunctuality and the heaviness of the roads after the freshet, Mr. S. Denison, the guide of the party, judiciously dropped that item, and we made straight for the seat of that ancient convent from which the modern mansion of Sir Frederick Milner takes its name. Nun Appleton is now the residence of Mr. Angus Holden, M.P. Only one side now remains standing of the Elizabethan rectangular building where Edward Fairfax, the translator of Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered," is supposed to have dwelt. The enterprise of the modern mason has disfigured and concealed this ancient wing and added to the old edifice a new structure belonging to an unknown school of architecture.

Bolton Percy was visited on the return journey to Tadcaster. The Rectory adjoining the old parish church is the residence of the Bishop of Beverley, who received the party personally, and described to them the numerous interesting features of the place. The church, which dates from the beginning of the fifteenth century is a fine specimen of its class, and is picturesquely situated on a rising ground, round which cluster the thatched roofed cottages of as leafy a village as could be found in Yorkshire. The Bishop showed everything worth remembering outside and inside the church, and was followed by a crowd of interested listeners into the narrow vestry, where are preserved parish registers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. One of the entries, dated about 1567, stated that on a certain day in that year John Brown, a labourer, and Ann Steel, presented themselves before the incumbent, and were duly united in wedlock. Immediately after there follows the curious additional entry—"N.B.—The above person was afterwards proved a woman, and was, of course, separated from Ann Steel." A very singular crucifix (figures on both sides) is fixed outside on the east end of the building.

Leeds Lab-Suit in the 16th Century.

IT Leeds is a place of great antiquity is well known. Roman remains have been found from time to time in and near the town affording ample proof that the neighbourhood was inhabited in the first four centuries of the Christian era; and William the Conqueror's Surveyors have recorded, in Domesday Day Book, that Leeds was a place of sufficient importance in the latter part of the 11th century to possess a priest and a mill of 4/-; and we know that, in the reign of King John, Maurice Paganel gave a charter to the knights of his manor of Leeds.

Materials for writing the history of the place are, unfortunately, very scanty and inaccessible; and one of the objects for which the Thoresby Society was established was the elucidation of the history of the town, and the collection and publication of such materials as still exist.

An interesting chapter, referring to the 16th century, is now presented to the members, consisting of depositions not hitherto published, which are preserved in the Public Record Office in London, under the reference "2 Eliz: 12." They contain the evidence in an action of Folkingham v. Lyndeley and uxor, but some preliminary explanation will be necessary to make this evidence intelligible.

The manor of Leeds belonged to the Crown in the reign of Elizabeth: and in Leeds, as in many other manors, the lord provided a corn mill for the use of his tenants. Anyone walking along Swinegate towards Briggate will not fail to notice a flour mill, which still has water power, standing back from the street on its south side, and still bearing the name of "King's Mills." It is probable that this mill stands on the site of that mentioned in the Domesday Survey, for it was a "Soke" mill until recently, that is to say, it had a monopoly, all the tenants of the manor being bound to grind their corn there. This privilege was extinguished in the present century, when the lord's rights were purchased by the inhabitants of Leeds.

In the middle of the 16th century, Thomas Lyndeley, and Elizabeth his wife, were tenants of this mill, and they complained of the injury which they had sustained at the hands of Mr. Thomas Folkingham, of North Hall, by reason of his having erected a corn mill near his house. This led to the action above referred to, though why Mr. Folkingham was plaintiff does not appear.

If we refer to Thoresby's History (Ducatus Leodiensis, 1st edition, 1715, p. [111],) we find the following information respecting the Falkingham (or Folkingham) family. After describing the stream, which rises at Adel, and falls into the Aire, near East Street, and which then, as now, was known by different names in different parts of its course, the historian proceeds: "On the West-side of the said
"Rivulet was the Seat of the Falkinghams, called the North-hall, Part "of which was standing in the Reign of King Charles I., when the "last of the Family sold the Estate to Mr. John Harrison, the Bene"factor." "At the Time of the memorable Survey of the "Mannor of Leedes, John Folkingham, Esq., held the Mannor of "North-Hall of the Queen, as of her Mannor of Leedes, by Knight's
"Service, with Suit to Her Majesty's Court of the Mannor of Leedes, "to which he paid 2s. 4d. It came to this Family from that of the "Pigots, but of Old belong'd to the ancient Family of the Ledes, of
"Leedes and North-Hall." Then follow three pedigrees, supported by very few dates, and giving conflicting accounts of the early history of the family. One of these begins in the reign of the Conqueror, and another, with a Pauline, of Leedes, whose grandson lived in the 43rd year of Edward III.'s reign. If the former be correct, this family ended in an heiress, Emma, who married a Galfridus Pigott, whose great-great-granddaughter, Jane, married Thomas Falkingham, and a descendant of this couple is said to have sold the North Hall estate to John Harrison. The depositions confirm Thoresby's statement as to the position of North Hall; and a reference to the accompanying map shows that it was situated in the angle between Vicar Lane and Lady Lane, the mill being upon the beck below Lady Bridge. The mill stood on a piece of ground called 'Aplegarth;' and it may be that Millgarth Street was originally the road leading to it.

Mr. Falkingham appears to have met the complaint of the tenants of the Queen's Mills by alleging that he was within his rights in building the mill, inasmuch as it stood within his own manor of North Hall; for we find that on the 7th of February in the 2nd year of Queen Elizabeth's reign, Sir Thomas Gargrave, Deputy Steward of the Honour of Pontefract, and three other gentlemen were directed by writ to make enquiries on the spot, and return answers to six interrogatories, which may thus be shortly stated:—

1. Whether there was a manor of Northall near Leeds? and whether it was held of the manor of Leeds, or of the manor of Pontefract, and by what service and rent?
2. Whether Thomas Falkingham had lately erected a water-mill in the manor of Northall, or in the manor of Leeds?
3. Whether the mill and mill-dam had land of Thomas Falkingham on both sides of it?
4. Whence Shipcar Beck, or Northall Beck came, and through what lordships it ran?
5. Whether there had, in time past, been a mill in Northall, and when and why it decayed?
6. Whether it was decayed because it "stode upon oure streame" "or not, and where it stode?"

Two of the Commissioners made enquiry on the spot on the 15th of March, and examined fifteen witnesses, whose depositions will be read with interest, but perhaps the most valuable part of the evidence is the map, which has been reproduced by photography.

The Commissioners appear to have carried out but indifferently their instructions to "make a true and perfecte platte of the scituacion of the said myll and streame." The map is indeed a very rude sketch, with no pretence to accuracy, but it is interesting as being the earliest map of the town known to exist.¹ The East is at the top of the sheet, as was not unusual in olden times; and at the right or South side, the River Aire is shown flowing, in rather too straight a line, from west to east. Near the middle it is spanned by the bridge, from which Briggate extends northward, until it meets Upper and Lower Head Rows. The latter is continued in a fairly straight line, as far as the beck, so that it includes Lady Lane as well as Lower Head Row. From this a street runs southward, probably representing Vicar Lane, and between this street and the beck stand Mr. Falkingham's mansion and mill. The course of the beck is shown as far as Scot Hall; and near Sheepscar, a tributary, Gipton Beck (then called Newton Beck), falls into it. North Street and Chapeltown Road are shown, crossing the stream by a bridge at Sheepscar, and Woodhouse Lane is also shown; but it is remarkable that the Parish Church does not appear. The position of the King's Mills is marked on the map; and near the mills, the "Auncyent Manor House of Leedes, called Castyll Hill." The depositions of the witnesses are followed by a list of documents produced by the plaintiff, a list of "artycles to be enquired upon in the Quene's Majesties behalf," and the verdict of a Jury of fourteen persons thereon. There are also extracts from Court Rolls, and a Certificate dated 16th January, 1 Elizabeth, showing that there were proceedings in that year in which Mr. Falkingham was an unsuccessful defendant.

As it appears that the North Hall Estate was purchased by John Harrison, it is possible that further information respecting it may hereafter be obtained from his representatives.

Asolf or Essolf,

SHIRE MINOR LORD OF THE TWELFTH CENTURY.

BY RICHARD HOLMES.

appear as if when at any time during the early Norman tion, either of the great lords of Yorkshire being dis-estates were in the King's hands, there was a systematic re part of the Crown to break up the large property, at e extent, as a proved danger to order, that is to the the sovereign, and to create a group of owners of a lower be seigniorial, holding independently of the King alone, more than the formal intervention of the mesne lord.

ighbourhood of Pontefract, such seems to have been the ed after the forfeiture of Earl Edwin in 1069, after that e Lascy in 1106, and again in 1122; after the death of val in 1131, and before the grant to William de Maltravers; fter the disappearance of Ilbert the second in 1141, the hich, though unexplained by contemporary evidence, was ll understood by his contemporaries themselves.

thod of effecting this process will be perceived by a the list of King's tenants in the Domesday Survey with ns of that record; and the result is that when manorial ally opens in the eleventh and twelfth centuries there were roughout the district as King's tenants, and to a great a certain fixity of tenure independent of their mesne series of minor lords, such as Ailric the father of Swein, himself, in Staincross and Osgoldcross; somewhat later another Ailric (at Ledston), with his sons Jordan, Reginald, Roger, and Walter, and one Lesing in Barkston and the southern part of Skyrack; still later Saxe in Agbrigg and Morley; and last and latest, though by no means least, Asolf or Essolf and his numerous family in Barkston-Ash, Osgoldcross, Morley, and Agbrigg. I say last, though I bear in remembrance, that in the Thornhill pedigree given in Flower's Visitation of 1563 (Harleian Society, xvi., 317), Essolf is described as Enfulsus,—Thoresby is nearer the mark when (Leo. Duc. i., 113) he calls him Askolphus,—is said to be as early as the time of the Conquest, while with the usual playfulness of the Elizabethan pedigree-maker when dealing with such remote ancestors, Essolf's supposed grandson of the same name is allocated to the time of Richard I., a generation at least being lost on the face of the pedigree itself.

Of the four groups I have named, and I think I have named them in order of time, only Ailric and Swain, of Staincross and Osgoldcross, were of Domesday date; and, appearing in the Survey not only as large holders in the pre-Norman time, but also as King's tenants to William I., are generally known; but Ailric and Lesing of Barkston-Ash, who belong to the next generation, and have not the advantage of mention in the great record, bear names unfamiliar to most, though a good deal may be learnt of them, especially from some of the chartularies. Leland, for instance, had some idea of Ailric, though he knew nothing of his four sons whom I have named, of Jordan and his three brothers, but confusing him with the far more important Ailric of Staincross, he thought him to be lord of Pontefract. In the third generation, however, in the reign of Henry I., and early in that of Stephen, there were two very large grantees in the Lascy and Warren fees, Asolf or Essolf, and Saxe, each of whom though a very important man, and the progenitor of important families, escaped the notice of Dugdale, and therefore of those innumerable followers of that topographer who directly or indirectly made him their fount of inspiration. The lands of Asolf or Essolf and those of Saxe met at Flockton, Shitlington, and Liversedge, of each of which each possessed a moiety; and although much may be said of Saxe, I confine myself at present to Assolf, following the various branches of the descent from him, putting upon record what I have ascertained concerning each, and stating frankly where I have found myself unable to complete the chain.

Asolf emerges in possession of much that had belonged to many in wide-spread districts; and as he could not have been heir to all, the probability is that he held most of their possessions as a grantee by purchase or favour. He might have been of original Danish descent, but it is the more likely that he was a new man in the district, to which he came with riches which he used in order to purchase firstly from King Henry, and afterwards from King Stephen, large grants of land that had escheated to the Crown in the time of the last-named King, or that had accumulated in the hands of his predecessor; manors from which neither Henry nor Stephen could obtain benefit, partly because the wars had made the lands unproductive, by withdrawing from them their cultivators, and partly because the royal necessities were in each case urgent, and could not wait the due return of the rent season.

Asolf never adopted a second or territorial surname, though his sons used his name, with the prefix of sonship, thus making him, as it were, the root of the title. But his descendants in the second generation, his grandsons, almost uniformly followed the newer practice, and at least from the commencement of the reign of Henry II., called themselves after the name of the place at which they settled, so that the link between his grandchildren and himself is seldom apparent, and is never easily traced, while that between the cousins themselves was almost wholly lost.

Asolf lived in the generation of which our records are most scanty. There was no Survey; the Assize Rolls have been lost, and Feet of Fines did not exist. Only from such documents as the monastic chartularies could we have obtained any information concerning him. But these also fail us to a large extent; for either he was no lover of the monkish life or system, and therefore made no grant to any monastery such as would have perpetuated his name, or, his grant being renewed and confirmed, and therefore superseded, by one of his sons, the original charter was not preserved; so that when the compilation of the various chartularies commenced in the first quarter of the thirteenth century, there were none from Asolf in any of the monastical muniment-chests.

Nothing, therefore, is known of him from this source, though his shadow dominates very much indeed, in an indefinite way; and when once attention has been called to his existence, in a way which is most tantalizing. He might indeed have assisted, as did so many of his contemporaries, to build up the monastic possessions, and perhaps he did; but if so, the succeeding generations renewed the different charters as if they were their own original gifts, and the primary record has in each case perished.

Asolf became a large proprietor of what was not necessarily, and at first, very productive, but which if well and wisely administered, under patient and prudent management, was capable of returning an ultimately enormous revenue. Asolf evidently administered his properties wisely, and he did this in such entire abnegation of his own name and fame, that these have been so completely lost to posterity that the learned Joseph Hunter himself was compelled to confess that "he knew not how the existence of Asolf was to be proved" (South Yorkshire, ii., 263). This obliteration and effacement of so remarkable a name was perhaps only possible by reason of the method of distribution of his estates which he adopted, and which I will shortly explain.

In the first place, it is probable that he married when but a young man, when the reign of Henry I. had not more than reached its middle term. He was in due course blessed with a large family of male children; and though I trace no daughters, either as receiving a dowry, or as being sent to a convent with a dowry as a suitable contribution to its funds, or indeed in any other way, they might have been equally numerous. Finding when yet not of middle age, this family of many sons growing up around him, and being either unwilling that they should hanker after his estates before he was ripe to leave them, or being swayed by a more statesmanlike policy, he thought it best that, in homely phrase, the eggs should not be all in one basket, in either case, he determined not to make himself too conspicuous a mark, and liberally apportioned his substance among his sons, of age or minor,—“divided his living among them,” in the scriptural phrase,—so that in the not unlikely event of a reverse of fortune, on the part of the grantor, or in the case of any other public trouble, the interests in his property might be diverse and various, and in any contingency the whole of it could hardly be confiscated at a single blow.

This his policy was so much of a success that all the district which had been possessed by Asolf, and which was by him, as I have supposed, divided among his sons, or designated by him to become the future property of each, continued in the hands of his descendants: each held his own proper share, through all the civil troubles of the twelfth century, with no dispossession, and with only the usual occasional fine. Thus, as all the Saxon Kings looked up to Woden as their common progenitor, so did a very large and widespread group of the secondary tenants of Barkston-Ash, Osgoldcross, Staincross, Skyrack, Agbrigg, and Morley, turn their eyes to the now almost forgotten Asolf.

This partition, or designation of the intended descent of his lands, was effected quickly, some time before 1140, in which year the process had probably been completed, and the interests in the immense estate made diverse; and unless part of the manor of Liversedge, called till very recently Liversedge Asolf, derives the affix from him, the name of this great tenant was not, so far as I can learn, attached to any of his land. Indeed, his personality has become almost entirely obscured.

If it is wished to trace the possessions of a landowner of the twelfth century, one resort is to apply to the monastic chartularies, and to search in them for his grants to the monasteries established on his manors, or in their neighbourhood. But in the case of Asolf, this resort fails us. In his time the fashion of founding or making grants to monasteries had hardly extended to the secondary tenants, the earliest instance of such a founder being that of Adam fitz Swain fitz Ailric at Monk Bretton; and when smaller grants are searched for, it is found that either Asolf held himself entirely aloof from the great monastic movement,—in his days it would have been the later stages of the Augustinian, or the earlier of the Cistercian,—or those donations which he made being subsequently renewed by one of his sons, the original deed of the original grantor was superseded and withdrawn from the muniment-shelves as useless. Curious instances of this practice spring up everywhere, we shall meet with many in the course of this paper, and I shall shortly instance one of Peter fitz Asolf to the monks of Rievaulx, of which no mention is extant anywhere except in a papal confirmation. But to a very large extent this was the lot which befel the less eminent grantors of benefactions to the monks in the two generations immediately preceding the compilation of the various chartularies. These commenced in the early days of Henry III., apparently as an effect of the last Lateran Council, in 1215, and among them that at Pontefract was one of the earliest. For the most part, as I have said, except in very occasional instances, these chartularies recognized only the charters which happened to be in full force, ignoring, except for special reasons and in the cases of royal and seigniorial grants, those of the dead which had been renewed and superseded by the grants of still living men. And not only are their own grants thus unrecorded, but their names, except in one instance, that of Saxe (378 P., S.Y. ii. 221), are not to be found attached, even as witnesses, to such deeds. There is indeed evidence, especially in the Rievaulx Chartulary, that the possessions in Flockton and Shitlington of Adam grandson of Asolf, and of Matthew son of Saxe adjoined, on which account they mutually witnessed each others' deeds (93 R, 101 R.). But there are very many of a later generation who, being tested by Jordan fitz Asolf, John fitz Asolf, Elias fitz Asolf, &c., preserve the shadow of the great name, but the shadow only.

Asolf was dead in 1165; and having apparently divested himself of all, or almost all, he left no great property to be inherited or scrambled for. His eldest son Peter, who died within a few months, seems to have been with him at Fairburn, which Adam the eldest son of Peter inherited. His younger sons were all thriving, each in his own way, and in his own sphere, some of them like Adam, adding to their possessions by a judicious marriage. Asolf himself had lived an active, honoured life in this part of the country for forty years,—a full generation; but as I have said, he was so careful for his posterity, so anxious to preserve his property for his children, and so thoughtless for himself and for his own reputation, that he left hardly a mark by which he can now be recognized, and has in fact been almost forgotten. He did not appeal to the reputation of a father; he did not assume a second name; nor did he adopt one from any locality, or attach to his simple cognomen a distinguishing qualification, whether of mind or body; he prided himself upon being simply Asolf. But he founded many families, and left an example of separating the interests which had centred in him that was imitated by various members of his family with equal success. No successor, however, could do this to so great an extent, for none of his posterity had so large a family, and none so large a possession; while a subsequent fashion arising of taking a family name from a locality rather than from a progenitor, his descendants did not become known as the Asolfs, or, except on rare occasions and for hardly more than one generation, as sons of Asolf; but rather by the name of one of the manors which they themselves owned, ignoring altogether that of the shrewd founder of their race. They were Birkins, or Tongs, or Thornhills, not Asolfs; and there was little evidence to show how closely such large families were allied.

At Asolf's death those who managed the royal revenues seem to have become suddenly aware that the dues on a large portion of his estates had eluded them; and they inflicted a series of fines for what they considered an attempted fraud,—“concealing a plea,” as the special offence was called: among others in Morley wapentake, Adam son of Peter son of Essulf, 40s.; John de Huuerum, one mark; Richard de Tweng (or Tong), one mark; William de Preston, one mark; Helias son of Assulf, one mark; Hugh son of Essulf, one mark. And intermixed with these names are a few others, some of whom were probably concerned in the offence as husbands of the daughters of Asolf or Peter: such as William de Bollings, one mark; William de Wircelai, one mark; Ralph de Insula, two marks; Richard de Yeland [Eand], 40s.; Richard Grammaticus, 40s.; Roger de Tilli, two marks; Robert, son of Hugh, four marks; Ralph de Niu hale, one mark; Ligulf de Heckmonwic, one mark.

I have said that Asolf had a large family of sons, and I assign to him at least eight. But to these sons I can only attribute the following imperfect succession of seniority, which I gather from the order in which some of the names occur when two or more are witnesses to, or are named in the same document:—PETER, JORDAN, JOHN, THOMAS, WILLIAM, [ELIAS, HUGH, RICHARD]. I have found no instance in charter evidence of this order not having been followed, though such a false precedence occasionally occurs on the Pipe Rolls.

(1) Peter fitz Asolf was in early life, in some way, a dependent of William Paganel, the founder of Drax, and the son of Ralph, who refounded Holy Trinity, York. Peter first appears as head and chief of the witnesses to the foundation charter by William Paganel of the monastery of Drax towards the close of the reign of Henry I., about 1131, or a little later, and we might ascertain more of him in all probability if the chartulary of Drax were accessible. His name is followed in the charter to which I have referred by those of his two elder sons, Adam and Thomas, who at the date of this document must have been little more than infants, for Adam lived seventy-six years afterwards. This perhaps points to an approximate date for the marriage of Asolf as being between 1120 and 1125, probably soon after 1122, when the great changes I have indicated were passing over the tenantry of the land, consequent on the final dispossession of Robert de Lascy. As Peter, again "filius Essolvi", he also witnessed with Matilda, mother of Henry de Lascy, a gift to Selby Abbey (289 S.) by John de Iascelles of lands at Brayton; and I have found two (only two) instances of his having been in actual possession of property, or making grants to a monastery. The first instance of Peter's possession of property in his own right is that he had been enfeoffed by his old patron, William Paganel, of two carucates in Keighley, which with a carucate in Horsforth, Peter's son Adam gave to the priory of Haverholm as a conventual provision for his daughter Juliana and his niece Maud. The second is that of a grant to the monastery of Rievaulx; and although, as is so frequently the case with these early grants, no charter is extant confirming it, informative in reference to it is embalmed in a bull of Pope Alexander II (252 R.), which, enumerating the grants to the monastery, names that of "Adam fitz Peter and of Roger his brother, also of Matthew the son of Saxe and of Philip his brother, in Shitlington and Flockton and adds "the gift of the same Peter in Ageltunum [a fanciful method of spelling Hathelton (that is, Harden in Bingley), arising from the omission of the aspirate, and the substitution of g for th] and Shipley and Heaton and Chellesley." This is most clear, and valuable as showing a practice; for it is an instance of a gift usually attributed to Adam, being really that of Peter the father, renewed by Adam the son.

And here I must, for a moment, interrupt the thread of the narrative to point out the mutilation the word Hathelton has undergone before it finally became Harden. There can be no reasonable doubt that its original form was Hilda's town, which in the four centuries preceding Domesday had become Hateltun (328*b*, lxii., col. 1) Heldetone (328*b*, lxii., col. 2), and Hatelton (379*a*, lxxxi., col. 1). In all these the derivation from the original is but slightly disguised, but the subsequent Middle Age course of the word till it settled down in the present "Harden" was more capricious. It was Hatheltone in 392 R., Hadeltona in 352 R., Hadeltona, Haddeltona, Haltona, Hardena, Haredene, and Hatheltona, at R. p. 283, Ageltunum in 252 R., and Barden (sic) in 352 R. In the Dissolution documents, R. p. 327, the name was Halton, Arden, Harden, and Halton Graunge, alias Harden Graunge; having been Hardenia in 58 R., and Hereden in the confirmation charter of 20 Henry III. to Kirklees (Monasticon I., 488), which enumerates the various gifts to Kirklees, among them three bovates in Cullingworth, with commonage in "Hereden." The name is now always Harden, with no local trace of the ton of Domesday.¹

In what I have said, I have assumed that in each case the charters in the Surtees edition of the Rievaulx Chartulary have been correctly copied, for I have not been able to refer to the original (JULIUS D. 1). Thus the clearly distinct Hatel*ton* of Domesday, after a curious attempt to affix and confine that name to the town, has given way entirely to Harden, with a hint of Hartden. And if this latter word had survived, those etymologists who, in entire ignorance of the local conditions, feel themselves equal to the ready derivation of such place-names, would have glibly converted "Hilda's town" into the "Stag's hill." And who should have been able to say them nay? But to resume.

(1) There was another Hathelton near Austwick; and it is noticeable that this also has become Harden.

Peter's wife was an Emma, of whom I can gather no more. Except that as she gave her testing consent (100 R.) to the subsequent alienations of the properties just referred to, she might indeed have been the heiress of the lands in all three manors, which were adjacent. At Harden, Ernegis de Burun had been the Domesday lord of a manor of two carucates, with a third carucate in the soke of Bingley, and it is not known who followed him. But the Rievaulx Chartulary (p. 283) shows (Patent Rolls, 6 Edward III.) that very shortly after his time there had been interests there in the hands of John of Castley, William son of William de Cantelupe, and Adam fitz Peter fitz Asolf; so that it is possible that the manor of Ernegis de Burun had been partitioned among three co-heiresses. There is no present hope of seeing our way through the maze; but I do not despair of enlightenment later on, through the appearance of some unexpected charter. Besides her testing consent to 100 R., Emma is mentioned, though not named, in the body of other charters (323 P., 95 R., 96 R., 99 R.) as having given consent to the alienation of properties in Shitlington and Flockton; so that she may be assumed to have had some sort of lower interest in those estates also.

Shitlington and Flockton formed a compact group of manors in which the lands of the descendants of Saxe and those of the descendants of Asolf met; Blacker, Shitlington, Flockton, and [Little] Midgley, the first and the fourth being each in Asolf's portion of the second. The possessions of Saxe were in the Warren Fee, of which Wakefield was the caput; those of Asolf were to the south, in the Lascy fee, of which Pontefract was the head. And when Adam fitz Peter made grants (95 R., 267 R.) of lands in them to Rievaulx, it was again with the consent of his mother, not mentioned by name, but whose rights were duly recognized, though there is no indication of their extent, or of her paternity. That this gift was stated to be for the soul of Adam's father also, and therefore made in or after 1165, when Peter died, shows the interest that, as his widow, Adam's mother had in the Lascy portion of Shitlington and Flockton, which were each waste, that is unproductive, manors at the time of the Survey.

That as Peter de Flockton, he had witnessed 86 P., about 1160, shows that the manor was then reclaimed, or was being reclaimed, from its waste condition, though there is no evidence of the stages through which it had passed. He is said to have been known also as Peter of Leeds (Burton, 170) and Peter de Midgley (heading to 323 P.); while he is very frequently styled Peter de Birkin: but there is no real authority for either of these three affixes, and each may arise from misapprehension; for though each of these local names belonged one or other of his sons, I think that Peter himself is never described by either in any original document. "Adam fitz Peter," Birkin, is, for instance, mistakenly transcribed as Adam, fitz "Peter Birkin": and so with the other cases.

Peter fitz Asolf died at least as early as 1165, and his son Adam who was in possession that year, was the lord of Birkin for the fort two subsequent years, and established the family name there; but there is not a particle of evidence to show that before his time Birkin had ever been the head of a fee.

(2) Jordan fitz Essolf was an officer of the fee of the Earl of Warren, and was one of the witnesses to the deed of confirmation of the manor of Bolton to the canons there (Monasticon II., 101) which was witnessed by the "Boy of Egremont," and which in the Monasticon copy is incorrectly dated "1151, 1st Henry II.," confessed taken from a late Patent Roll, the "primo" of the year of our Lord being a substitution for "quinto" in what should have been "1155. As Jordan fitz Essolph he likewise witnessed 93 R. and 100 R. (two charters of his elder brother Adam), and 248 P., one of 1189.

He is also called de Flockton, 86 P.; but it is as Jordanus filius Assulphi, that on the Pipe Roll of 1166, he is charged with forty marks for having made an unprovable allegation against Hugh fitz Ketelber. As in connection with this fine, he is not described as an official, it is probable that at the time of the occurrence he had not become Constable of Wakefield, as he ultimately was (Monasticon I 406), when, together with the Constables of Tickhill and Conisbrough and Otto de Tilli, then described as seneschal of "the Earl of Conisbrough," he witnessed a charter to Santoft from Hamelin, Earl of Warren. This last description enables us to fix the date of the document as being at least after 1164, in which year Hamelin became Earl of Warren, j. ux., as second husband of Isabel the Countess. Jordan, with his brothers John and Thomas, also witnessed 248 P., in which charter the three are collectively described as "sons of Asolf" and later on, there was a suit (Curia Regis, Morrow of St. Martin 1194) between Richard son of Essulf de Thwang and Richard son of Jordan, concerning the manors of Thornhill, Haddsworth, and Bierley and the proceedings were continued, for there was a Fine in the following spring (Conversion of St. Paul, 6 R.) between the same parties. Jordan deceased that year, thirty years after the death of his elder brother, Peter, whom we may therefore consider to have died men less than sixty years old. I have said that Jordan was also called de Flockton, and under that name he granted to the monks of Byland a right of way through his lands to their forge at Benteia (Add. Char. 7456), the present Bentley Grange. He married a daughter of Richard fitz Roger, and had at least two sons, Richard, who tested the Monk Bretton deed referred to in S.V. II. 79, and was defendant in the litigation (pp. 32 and 38) of 1194, and Elias, who tested 101 R. The descendants of the elder, Richard, adopted the name of Thornhill, and were the progenitors of a great mediæval family so called, which according to Flower's Visitation lasted for seven generations from him. On the evidence of the Monk Bretton charter, Mr. Hunter places Richard at the head of this Thornhill pedigree; though dealing with that charter only, he named but Jordan, John, and Thomas, the surviving sons of Asolf, who all witnessed 248 P., and he made no attempt to connect these three brothers with any of Asolf's other five sons.

There is one interesting point with regard to the arms of some members of this family, which I have never seen discussed, but which may be fitly mentioned at this stage. The family was in the early days purely one of landowners of the second rank, making no attempt to range themselves as warriors with the more lordly class; and their arms have one remarkable point in common. A fess, a chief, or some other combination of two or more horizontal lines, was the predominant feature of their bearing, to which a later generation generally added a label, a fleur de lis, or some further distinguishing mark. But the addition was not always present in the earlier stages, in which the simple combination of horizontal lines was the predominant feature. This was subsequently altered and varied by different branches of the family; those at Birkin adding a label, those at Leeds three eagles displayed, and some of those at Thornhill nine martlets. The later version of the Birkin arms, a fess with a label in chief, is still to be seen on the tower of Birkin Church. These arms, a fess (i.e. two lines), were borne by the descendants of Peter the first son (Adam de Birkin, Thomas de Leeds). As two bars (four lines), two gemelles and a chief (five lines), and a fess between two gemelles (six lines), those arms were borne by different Thornhills, each being an increase in number and a rearrangement of the two horizontal lines which formed the Birkin fess; they were in fact a practical claim to descent from Asolf, or one of his sons, and therefore of cousinly kindred to Adam fitz Peter. So the Baildons, the Rawdons, the Thwengs, the Jacksons, and the Bartons, who each bore a fess (two lines) as the groundwork and foundation of their arms; the Ellans, the Kirkbys, the Heatons, and the Quarmbys, who each bore two bars (two lines); the Leptons, who bore three bars (three lines); the Flemings, who bore barry of six; and the Meynells, who bore three bars gemelles (six lines): I should have great hope of tracing up one of the other branches of Peter's family. Nor in this enumeration should I forget the Stovins, who with no pretence at obtaining enrolment at any County Visitation, bore the simple six bars with a fess through so many generations (S.Y. I. 83). And thus to this family Peter fitz Asolf, I venture to attribute the probable progenitorship of the most important Middle Age gentilitian families of almost every wapentake of West Yorkshire. For to that descent I consider that most of those families laid practical claim by their use of an adaptation or modification of the fess of the eldest branch, the Birkins.

(3) John fitz Essolf does not appear on the 1166 Pipe Roll, unless (which is probable) he is the John de Huurum who is charged a mark but his name occurs on the Roll of 1169 (15 H. 2) as assessed for another mark, which he paid, and also as suffering a fine of forty shillings for an unjust disseisin. Half of this latter amount he paid at once, and half in the following year. He had property at Wentworth and at Stansfield; for he granted a tenement in the former place to the monks of Monk Bretton, and gave five bovates of land in Stansfield in dowry at the marriage of Amabel his daughter to Roger son of Warrer. Each of these deeds was witnessed by Jordan fitz Essolf and Thomas his brother, and the second names also Eustace "my son." John fitz Essolf appears at least twice subsequently on the Pipe Rolls. In 29 Henry II. he made a Fine of 13s. 8d., and claimed land in Baildon against Hugh de Lelay, and two years afterwards he paid a mark for permission to compound a dispute with Richard de Wath. Finally his name appears in the testing clause to three charters in the Pontefract Chartulary, 248 P., 263 P, and 264 P. In the first, a dated charter, he is coupled with those two of his brothers who test the Bretton deed, "Jordan, John, and Thomas, sons of Asolf," the dating clause being of that curiously circumlocutory character which was frequent in the last half of the twelfth century. In this instance of 248 P., it reads: "This charter was made in the second Lent next after King Henry II. took the Cross." It follows that as the King "took the Cross" in January, 1187-8, the charter was made in the Lent of 1189, that is to say, only three months before the sudden demise of the monarch. Nos. 263 and 264 are a generation later, and refer to two bovates at Flockton. They are witnessed by William son of John son of Asolf, thus giving a brother to the Eustace named on the Stansfield deed, and adding a link to the pedigree, to which I regret my present inability to make a further addition; though I should mention that Mr. Hunter thought the Flemings of Wath to have sprung from this John.

(4) Thomas de Monte (89 P.), de Monkehil (104 P.), and de Monte Monachorum (313 P.), was the grandee of the Pontefract district before his nephew Adam fitz Peter migrated to it; and his life-history receives much illustration from the Chartulary of the monks there, he being one of their most important officers. As a junior to his elder brothers Jordan and John, we have seen him in the western district, testing 248 P. in 1189, with no ostentation of the honourable position which he occupied at home. But in fact he had then been the important business man of the monks for nearly a third of a century, and he retained that position, ever adding to its dignity, for another twenty years at least. He was their dapifer in 147 P., 206 P., 241 P., 314 P., 331 P., 360 P., and 387 P.; their provost in 318 P.; their seneschal in 46 P.; and as pincerna he appears on the Pipe Rolls of 12 and 13 Henry II., charged with a mark as a royal due. This is of course the date of the death of his father Asolf, of Asolf's property being brought within the purview of the officials, and of his own accession to the estate at Monkhill. The date of his death does not occur; but he had at least five sons: (1) Thomas, who tests 95 R., 100 R., 89 P., and the town charter in 1194, and either migrated (perhaps to Flockton, for he witnessed Rievaulx charters of lands there), or died heirless (certainly predeceased his father), at any rate disappeared from his position of influence at Pontefract; (2) Michael, the final inheritor of the Pontefract property, who tests 88 P., 89 P., and 90 P., in company with and following Jordan son of Ailric, the great proprietor at Ledston, and his three brothers, and 317 P., 318 P., and 331 P., still in a subordinate position to his father, while as a benefactor he grants 104 P., his charter being witnessed by Robert Wallis and Jordan de St. Mary; and (3) Gregory, a monk who tests 46 P., 97 P., and 143 P., in which last he precedes his "brother" Michael, it may be by birthright, but more probably as holding a dignified position in the clerical hierarchy of the monastery. These were all interested more or less in Pontefract, and frequently test the monastic charters; but there were also (4) a William, the elder of Michael, and (5) a John, his junior, each of whom witnessed the Monk Bretton charter of John fitz Asolf, who was considered by

It is probable that the descendants of Michael held their own Pontefract, under the name of More, till quite recent times. I tra-but one son, John, who was a constant witness for the monks, testi-at least a score of their charters, two of them being dated 1224 and 1332 respectively. This John had three sons, Robert, Roger, and John, of whom the oldest is repeatedly called "de Monkeil" (h-taker had been "de Monte Monachorum"), and in the 1224 charter Roger and John each independently is called a grandson of Michael but as I have no place-name attached to either, I cannot say whether the died out or died out. In either case I do not trace the descendants. Robert the eldest, however, had a son John, who, before 1224, made a substantial grant to the monks as John, son of Robert de Pontefract, and as I have said it is probable that he was the progenitor of the family who maintained a good yeoman position in Pontefract till the 14th century. In 8 Edward I. (1279), a licence was granted to Robert de More, among others, to give ten shillings of the value of the house in Pontefract; in 1378, John del More, was a James More, mayor of Pontefract, in 1447, the will of Johanna, wife of Robert More, was granted to the goods

the dispensator, may, however, be another William, a successor to Thomas, perhaps his son. If William fitz Asolf were the "dispensator," he must have attained an advanced age. Like his brother Thomas, he was a married man, and the names of four sons are on record. Alexander followed his father as "pistor," Herbert and William hived out to Whitwood and the Mere. Of John, I learn no more than his existence, and that he tested the confirmation charter of Jordan de Capriole-curia (386 P.), granting Barnsley to the monks of Pontefract (Monasticon, No. xxx.)

(6) Elias fil' Essulfi is reported in the Pipe Roll of 12 Henry II. (1166), as owing a mark; and according to Liber Niger, he held of Henry de Lascy a quarter of a knight's fee of the "new feoffment," that is, of the fees created in the time of King Stephen, whom it was the persistent policy of those who held rule in the time of Henry II. to ignore, as far as possible; in pursuit of which policy, they scheduled as of "the new feoffment," an impliedly inferior class, all that had been created in the time of the "usurping" King. Elias witnesses 98 R. as Helias filius Essolfi, and it is probably he who appears both as Elias de Sirborn (Sherburn) in 101 R., and as Elias de Huddleston in 313 P., 314 P., and 315 P.

(7) Neither have I met with anything definite of Hugh, except his mention as Hugh filius Essulfi on the Pipe Roll of 12 Henry II., as, like so many of his brothers, being charged with a mark; and that he had certainly three sons, Richard, Robert, and Hervey, who test various charters of Adam fitz Peter to Rievaux with regard to lands in Shitlington and its neighbourhood (Richard, 100 R.; Robert, 98 R.; Hervey, 94 R., 100 R.). But the further history of this brother of Peter fitz Asolf does not appear, unless Hugh and another of his sons settled at Burton Salmon, where the descendants of a Hugh had considerable possessions and an important position. If so, Hugh de Bretton was (see the Pedigree) the father of Pigot, but no other son of his appears on the Bretton deeds in the Pontefract Chartulary, though a small pedigree of descendants from his son Pigot can be made out there. He might also be the father of Thomas and Michael, who witness 159 P., a charter of William de Preston, or he might be the money-lender, Hugh de Bretton, who, in the first decade of the next century, had received in pledge (174 P.) the land at Allerton Bywater, which had been the heritage of Harvey son of Richard son of Lesing, of Ledston.

(8) Richard son of Essulf was certainly a senior, probably the second son of his father, though I do not so place him, because in his case also I have utterly failed in my search for an instance of his appearance with either of his brothers as witnesses to a charter, whereby a hint might be obtained as to his exact order in the seniority. He must have been an elder brother, for he had an early interest in the canonry of Bolton, evidenced by his witnessing the original grant to them of Kildwick by Cecily de Romilly, while they were still at Embsay. As Richard de Tweng he was charged a mark on the Pipe Roll of 12 Henry II., and as Ric' fil' Essul' de Thwang he pursued his claim in 1194 against his nephew Richard, son of Jordan (Rot. Cu. Reg. I., 123). He witnessed 240 P. also, and either himself or a son of the same name of Richard de Tanga tested 214 P. and 215 P.

As I have said, I am uncertain about the seniority of Richard, Elias and Hugh, since neither of them appears together with either of the other five in any of the monastic chartularies which I have had the privilege of examining. But though their inheritance and possessions would likely have given them influence and importance in the district dominated by the monks of Rievaulx rather than that in which the monks of Pontefract had the predominant position, their names do not occur with certainty on any of the Rievaulx charters.

This completes my notes on the various sons of Asolf, who were thus so widely spread through so large a district in so independent a fashion. I now take up the next generation of the main line.

(1) Adam, Asolf's grandson and heir, had a comparatively circumscribed inheritance, though indeed it was sufficiently considerable, and was much extended by his marriage with an heiress; but even then his ultimate possessions in Yorkshire were confined mainly to the neighbourhood of Pontefract, and that of Shitlington, Flockton and Stainbrough. His name was attached to the confirmation of Temple Hirst in 1152, and he also witnessed the grant by Avicia de Romilly to Drax of the advowson of the church of Saltby, which was made by the advice of Hugh, archdeacon of Leicester, and which was witnessed by Alice de Gaunt, sister of Robert de Gaunt. This would be while she was the widow of Ilbert de Lascy II., and before her marriage with Roger de Mowbray, which took place about 1143, or soon after Henry de Lascy had established himself in his inheritance. In 1165, Adam (presumably as the chief offender) was fined 40s. or three marks (his brothers had been fined a mark only) for the attempt to defraud the royal revenue by a concealment, and in 1166, he was reported in Liber Niger, as holding a knight's fee of the creation of the time of King Stephen, of the "new feoffment," as it was called. It is not clear when Birkin became the seat of his east-country fee. That had been originally at Stainbrough, which, however, in middle life, after his marriage with Matilda de Caux, he almost abandoned in favour of Fairburn, and it was from Fairburn, that he gave to the Pontefract monks (321 P.) half a bovate of land to provide oblations and wine at Mass. Here he seems to have settled while the mansion was being built for him at Birkin.

After the family fashion, Adam gave out of his inheritance to his next brother, Thomas, a grant consisting of lands in Leeds (Glover's Visitation, p. 302); with the result that while he himself ultimately adopted the name of Birkin, his brother and his brother's descendants became "de Leeds." The gifts of Adam to the two great monastic establishments connected with his fee, especially to Rievaulx, were so large and important that they require some elaboration, many of the circumstances having been entirely overlooked, so far as I can learn, and regard having been paid only to Adam's middle-age and late-in-life position in the agricultural fee of Birkin. He himself had been a mine-owner in early life, which will be a revelation to many who have been accustomed to think of him mainly as Adam de Birkin. But this we learn explicitly from 99 R., which although it is preserved in the chartulary of Rievaulx in a cancelled form, is yet as valuable and authoritative as ever for its incidental mention of such a fact. This cancelled or superseded charter, which was stated to have been granted with the consent of his mother and his brethren (three of whom, Thomas, William, and Roger, witness it), gave to the monks a site for a grange in Shitlington, and two carucates of land there, with commonage both in Shitlington and Flockton, and other easements "as I have them for my own work,"—sicut habeo ego ad proprium meum opus. This document was much earlier in date than that by which the mines at Kimberworth were given by Richard de Busli to the monks of Kirkstead, which was a very similar grant, thought by Mr. Hunter (S.Y., I. 17) to be the earliest mention of an iron-foundry in Yorkshire. But Adam, who had other such properties elsewhere, still further to the west, as we shall presently see, gradually ceded all his mineral rights in various parts of the wapentake of Skyrack to the Rievaulx monks. And this incidental mention thus proves that Adam fitz Peter fitz Asolf was far away the earliest known middle-age mine-master, unless his father had mined before him. He had, indee mines, or properties capable of being mined, in four districts : Faweather on the outskirts of Rumblesmoor, at Harden to the south each in Bingley, at Chellow in Heaton, all in Skyrack, and Shitlington and Flockton in Agbrigg ; in each of which places we find him seating Rievaulx monks, and giving them, wherever possible exclusive mineral rights.

His earliest grant to them (94 R.) must have been very early at least well before the middle of the twelfth century, for it was witnessed by Hugh prior of Kirkstall (if indeed "Kirkstall" is not misreading for "Kirkstead"), Ailric priest of Leeds, Adam his son and Henry de Lascy, of course long before this last became the lord. It grants a site at Favedre (the present Faweather) in the east of Rumblesmoor, and whatever he had there in wood and plain a site in Oghethwaite in Stainbrough for furnaces (the name of which seems to be preserved in the present Baggerwood), all mineral rights in Stainbrough, wood for charcoal and other necessities, common pasture for an unnamed number of animals, and exclusive mineral rights there. This was very shortly renewed by 91 R., which was the effective charter always quoted, being countersigned by the lord of the fee. But it was evidently later in date, for it speaks of the furnace, the site of which was granted in 94 R., as being in operation, and it defines the number and kind of animals to be allowed to partake of the common pasture. The second charter (91 R.) was witnessed by William abbot of Hode (Hood Grange, near Thirsk) and Peter de Ros, husband of Adelina, one of the sisters and co-heirs of Walter Espec, the founder of Rievaulx. This must therefore have been at least before 1143, in which year the monks of Hode finally transferred themselves to Byland, under Roger their abbot, William being a predecessor whose name has not otherwise been preserved. By this charter (91 R.) Adam gave to the monks of Rievaulx the site of their furnaces in Stainbrough, the clearing called Oggethwaith in that town, all the ironstone and the wood needed to reduce it (for it was not yet the practice to use coal), with common pasture for four horses, eight oxen, five cows, and twenty pigs, and exclusive right to reduce the Stainbrough ore. To this grant, which (like 94 R.) was declared to have been made with the consent of all his brethren, that of his heirs is now added. Part of it received almost immediate confirmation (98 R.) from Henry de Lascy, the confirmation being witnessed by Helias, son of Essolph, of the older generation, and by Robert son of Hugh, and Thomas son of Peter, with Roger his brother, of the second generation. The grant was simultaneously enlarged by 92 R., in order to give the monks the mineral rights, not only in Stainbrough, which 91 R. had done, but in all other places in which Adam had granted any rights to them. This last charter, in which neither his mother nor his wife concurred, as if neither had rights in its subject, is said to have been made with the consent of Robert his son, and of all his heirs, and it was witnessed by all those witnesses who had tested 91 R., being apparently especially aimed at the monks of Byland, though there was doubtless a glance at the fraternities both of Kirkstall and Pontefract. Adam in fact, by 92 R., constituted himself a special local patron of the monks of Rievaulx, excluding all others from the sphere of his influence and patronage; and in this case, the consent even of the chief lord seems not to have been considered necessary, which implies the high position of Adam in the fee. That Robert his son alone was named in the grant, appears to evidence that he alone had special interest in the locality, as the designated successor of his father; but quite a generation after its date, probably on Robert's death, the charter was renewed and confirmed by 345 R., with the consent of Adam's younger sons, John and Peter, Roger and William, Thomas de Leeds, Adam's brother, heading the list of witnesses, which concludes with Pigot (son of Hugh, 332 P.) de Bretton (Burton Salmon). 358 R. and a Fine 19 Henry III., No. 176, which rehearse the gift, speak of it as in Falthwaite, a hamlet in the west of Stainbrough, while it is indicated by 368 R. as having been granted soon after 1160. This, however, must refer to the confirmation only, not to the original grant.

By 91 R., Adam practically denuded himself in favour of the monks of Rievaulx of all his mineral rights at Falthwaite in Stainbrough; but he retained Stainbrough itself (that is, the eastern portion of the manor), and probably in consequence of the exhaustion of the wood at Falthwaite, his descendants afterwards gave to the monks rights of estover in the wood of Stainbrough, while they ultimately, in 1285, exchanged away all their remaining interests to William de la Brook.

But though Adam had given exclusive mineral-rights in Stainbrough to Rievaulx, he had by no means given all his properties there; for other monks at Pontefract had their claims upon him, and to them he granted half his mill at Stainbrough (Mon. Ang., No. xxiii.), which was a post-Domesday water-mill, his design being to better their provision (ad procuracionem earum [sic] emendam). This also was not long after 1159, the date of the re-establishment of those monks; and the deed (in which Matilda de Caux concurred in her paternal name) was witnessed among others by Robert, Adam's eldest son, by Thomas fitz Peter and Roger fitz Peter, two of his brothers, and by the four brothers (Jordan, Reginald, Roger and Walter) from Ledston, those sons of Ailric who so frequently in company witnessed similar Pontefrac deeds.

Adam had also made a further grant to Rievaulx from the Stainbrough neighbourhood, consisting of 15 acres of land in Blacker, traces of which name still remain in Blackerland, Blackerwood, and Blackerbeck, separating Shitlington from Emley and West Bretton. This Blacker was in Adam's moiety of Shitlington, from which manor, and from Flockton, he granted to Rievaulx (95 R.) all the iron-ore and dead-wood in his part of the manors, the southern, with the old "exclusive rights of working the same," so that none other except the monks of Rievaulx should find iron in those places, or take away ironstone or wood from them. He also gave to the same monks, by the same charter, 20 acres "between Little Midgley and Emley Brook" (now called Bentley Beck), and he included in the grant, that which had been previously made (91 R.) of common pasture in Shitlington and Flockton for 4 horses, 8 oxen, 5 cows, and 20 pigs, adding a new concession to the monks to construct in the water of Blacker a pool for a mill. This charter, which was witnessed among others by Alexander, abbot of Kirkstall, who died 1182, by three of the grantor's brothers, Thomas de Leeds, William, and Roger, by his cousin Thomas son of Thomas (of Monkhill), and by Adam de Preston, near Kippax, was granted with the consent of his mother, and of all his heirs, and for the soul of his father and of all their relatives. And this it may be noted is (besides the mention in the papal bull of Alexander III., to which I have already adverted p. 30) the first reference to Adam's father in the whole series of deeds. A co-ordinate deed (96 R.), from Adam's brother Roger, made a similar grant of another 15 acres in Blacker, also with the consent of their mother, of Sir Adam, his brother, and in the presence of an independent series of witnesses. Adam is, in this deed only, described as "Sir;" and he confirmed the gift in a charter (97 R.), which states the subject of the grant to be within Shitlington and Flockton. This charter is moreover witnessed by Simon, prepositus of Fairburn, as a result probably of Adam's removal to that manor, on which, as I have said, he seems to have resided for a time, previous to his final settlement at Birkin.

This was all done not later than 1165, in any case "many years" (243 R., p. 179) before 1170.

But Adam had property of a similar mining character, and still further away from his later agricultural homes at Fairburn and Birkin; and of this also he divested himself in favour of the Helmsley monks. By a similar charter (100 R.), he conferred upon them similar rights at Hathelton (i.e. Harden in Bingley), in the neighbouring manor of Shipley, in Heaton (in Bradford), and in Chellow, a hamlet of Heaton still preserving the name in Chellow Dene and Chellow Grange (see also 543 S., 544 S., and 545 S.).

This charter was tested, apparently about the same time as 95 R., by the same Thomas, William, and Roger, his brothers, and Thomas son of Thomas; but with the addition of Jordan, son of Essolf, as witness, and with the consent, not only of Emma his mother, which 95 R. had had, but with that of Matilda his wife. This seems to indicate a recent marriage, and that Adam's union with Matilda de Caux took place after his father's death, and while his mother was still alive: in which case she could not have been the mother of his elder son Robert, though she was certainly the mother of John, his ultimate heir; for John, after her long widowhood, succeeded to her land, as we shall presently see.

This grant is referred to in 372 R. (Patent Rolls, 6 Edward III., part 2, m. 23), (a confirmation in which all the then existing grants to Rievaulx are enumerated) as (p. 283) "the gift which Adam fitz Peter of Birkin made of all the town of Hathelton [Harden] with all its liberties and appurtenances, except one bovate of land, which he had formerly given to the canons of Bolton [and which the canons themselves afterwards gave to the monks], and of the common pasture of Harden everywhere;" in which an attempt is made to localise Hathelton as a part of Harden. The attempt, however, did not succeed; and Harden has, for long enough, been used to denote the whole, both of the hamlet and its circumjacent lands. Indeed, the entire disappearance of Hatherton, locally, has been a considerable cause of discomfiture to enquirers.

In this document mention is again made of the gift (pp. 283-4) of Thomas de Birkin (Adam's grandson) of "all his lands and of all his wood which is called Harden, between Hadelton and Cullingworth," and of the gift of Robert de Everingham and his wife Isabella (p. 284), of "the whole town of Hathelton and all the wood of Harden, and twelve bovates of land and half the mill of Cullingworth, and three bovates of land with appurtenances in Fagheder (Faweather), and of all tenemen and tenures which the said monks formerly had of the gift of Adam fi Peter and of John de Birkin, his son, in Rumblesmoor and Stainbrough, with the appurtenances, and of common of pasture everywhere in Stainbrough for twenty-four oxen and for four horses or mares, and for twenty pigs and one boar, &c., and of reasonable estover in the woods of the same Robert and Isabella, and their heirs, of Stainbrough, to burn in the grange of Falthwaite, of the dry woods of Falthwaite, and of free ingress and egress for their men and animals to the aforesaid common pasture in Stainbrough."

But there was a further charter (93 R.), presumably after the death of Emma, mother of Adam, for his wife Matilda alone is mentioned while it was accepted by his sons Robert, John, and Peter, neither of whom was named in 100 R. This again appears as if Adam's marriage with Matilda de Caux had taken place after his father's death, and while his mother was still alive, and that the consent of John and Peter, the infant sons of the second family, was formally declared by the father, so that when they in due course inherited their share of the property, their inheritance would be subject to the claim of the monks. In this later charter (93 R.) Adam gave to the same monks, at a 5s. rent, thirty acres in Shitlington, that is to say, ten acres in Brereroyd, and twenty acres in Little Midgley Wood, towards the west. The names of Adam and Richard, chaplains of Birkin, head the list of witnesses to this Shitlington charter; and those of John and Peter, the east-country sons of the second marriage, appear in it, but only in a subordinate position, as witnesses.

The whole course of Adam's connection with the mineral country of the west (never hitherto emphasized, so far as I have seen) is thus indicated and illustrated in these ten or twelve Rievaulx charters. There is a glimpse at his early life as a mine-master on his own account, with perhaps little else, and then his gradual admission of the monks, and his transference of the chief rights in the properties to them, as his agricultural interests in the east became more valuable and urgent, and as they devolved upon him by degrees, firstly, by gift or inheritance from his father, which culminated in 1165, and ultimately through his marriage with Matilda de Caux, who became heir to properties near Cantley, and to much in Lincolnshire and Nottinghamshire at the death of her father, Robert de Caux, in 1186. So that, abandoning, or retaining only a small interest in the western districts (1) of Shitlington and Flockton, (2) of Falthwaite and Stainbrough, and (3) of Harden and the other property in the Bingley manor, and making Fairburn a stepping-stone, he finally established himself at Birkin as the founder of a family there, with John de Birkin, the eldest of his second family, as his heir.

There is one single example (344 P.) of Adam fitz Peter having called himself Adam de Falthwaite; but no charter has survived in which he was styled "of Shitlington," "of Flockton," "of Midgley," "of Harden," "of Heaton," "of Shipley," or "of Chellow." There is, however, a remarkable document in the Pontefract Chartulary (323 P.), in which, as Adam fitz Peter of Midgley (i.e. Little Midgley in Shitlington, "de Midgley" being an addition made by the rubricator), he gives to the Pontefract monks a bovaté of land in Midgley, "that is to say, the eighth part of all Midgley;" so that, as "all Midgley" contains 997 acres, it would appear as if that were the equivalent of a carucate. Of course, such an inference would be absurd; and the conclusion which I have drawn from this and similar passages is that (Yorkshire Archæological Journal, xiii., 219,) the Domesday and early carucate was reckoned upon the pasture, the wood, and the cultivated land only, and that the Fields, or outlying lands not yet brought into cultivation (though in many cases they had not long to wait for it), were altogether neglected in the enumeration.

Another document dealing with Adam's eastern lands is one (Monasticon I., 565) by which he gave to Hedley five acres of his meadow in Smeathalls, which is an outlying part of Birkin, between Sutton and Beal. This charter, in which the rubricator calls him "de Birkin," is witnessed among others by Thomas, Adam's brother, and Robert his son, William son of Thomas, and Robert his brother, and it appears to be earlier than the Midgley charter, which was about 1170, when Adam fitz Peter developed additional anxiety for the Pontefract monks, as if their needs had only recently become known to him. He then gave them not only (319 P., Monasticon No. xxiii.,) half the mill of Stainbrough, earmarking it especially, as for their maintenance, and (320 P.) five acres in Birkin, with three in Smeathalls, but (321 P.) a half bovaté in Fairburn, specially for oblations and wine at Mass, and (324 P.) ten other acres in Smeathalls.

Except 344 P., in which he styles himself Adam de Falthwaite, the Hedley charter, in which the rubricator calls him "de Birkin," and 323 P., in which the rubricator calls him "de Midgley" in the title only, neither of those charters gives Adam any local name; he is simply Adam fitz Peter in them all. There is, however, one (325 P.) of the group, in which, in the body as well as the title, I is called "de Birkin;" and this is evidently the later in date, and after the death of Robert, his eldest son; for while it does not name Robert, it specially designates John as Adam's son and heir; so that between 325 P. and all earlier charters, there is a sharp line of division. Thenceforward, till his death in 1207, Adam is always known as Adam fitz Peter de Birkin; and this sometimes to the complete obscuration of the fact that he ever had assumed any other appellation. A charter of Adam son of Peter, "de Floketon," printed in the Yorkshire Archæological Journal (vol. iv., 162), is hardly an exception to this statement; for as it was in a late thirteenth century hand, while its subject matter belonged to a date quite a century earlier, it could have been only a copy with which a usual liberty had been taken of inserting "de Floketon" by way of denoting the particular Adam fitz Peter who was the grantor. But I name it, and tabulate it, lest I might be charged with having overlooked it.

There is one other charter (356 R.) in the Rievaulx Chartulary which caused me some perplexity, now partly resolved by reference to the Bodleian MS.; whereby I find that the document has been inaccurately copied, not only in the subject-matter, but in the reference to the MS. itself, for while it professes to be of Vol. 117, it is really from Vol. 116. The charter is moreover stated to have been, when Dodsworth copied it, "in the custody of Natt: Birkhead of Estlaye, in the parish of South Birkby," while there is no such parish, and the Nathaniel Birkhead of Dodsworth's time was of East Hague, in the parish of South Kirkby, near Pontefract. (See his will, RECORD SERIES, Vol. ix., and some account of him in S.Y., II. 451.) Moreover, a portion of land named in this document is said to have been a carucate, which should have been a bovat. But there was one statement in it from which I obtained a very serviceable hint; the grant was said to have been made for the souls of Matilda, Adam's wife, and Robert his son, as if each were dead; while it is a matter of record that Matilda de Caux, Adam's only known wife, survived her husband at least 17 years, and that her son John (called in 356 R. Adam's "son and heir") did not receive seisin of her lands till her death in 1224. All, however, may be reconciled by the supposition that Adam had two wives, each named Matilda; Matilda, the mother of Robert, having interests in Harden and the other lands of the Bingley Manor, and Matilda de Caux, the mother of John. And though I have found nothing positive to confirm such a theory, I cannot but see that the rehearsal in 356 R. gives much countenance to it, while it supplies a special reason for the name of Matilda de Caux being given to her in full in 319 P.

If Adam did indeed have two wives, as has never hitherto been suspected, nothing certain is known of the first. But Matilda de Caux, who was clearly the mother of all his children, except the eldest, if not of Robert also, came of an illustrious race. Geoffrey Alselin, called Azelin twice in the Derbyshire Survey, was named last but two in the preliminary list of Yorkshire tenants in Domesday (298*b*: ii., col. 2), but, as if he had advanced in dignity during its preparation, his manors were placed eighteenth in order in the body of the volume, immediately after those of Ralph Paganel, from whom, in the preliminary list, he had been separated by eight others. Of his origin, nothing is known, though his second name looks as if he were the son of Asa or Alsi; and he is one of the few Domesday tenants who did not take a name from the continental manor which he owned as his birthplace. He had a very large and widely extended grant, consisting almost entirely and exclusively of the lands of a powerful pre-Norman owner, one Tochi, son of Otta or Outi, for he is called by each name in the Survey,—who is especially distinguished in each shire in which he had lands, as having possessed therewith the fullest rights of soc and sac, of toll and thaim, and of all customs; and who, in the lists of such grandees, is placed even before the Earls Edwin and Morcar. Tochi either retained his manors till death, or lost them by escheat, perhaps after participation in Earl Edwin's revolt in 1069, of the particulars of which so little is known, though the effects of the dispossession which followed were so widespread. In any case, the transference of his manors was complete; and while he does not appear to have lingered on as King's tenant, neither did anyone calling himself "son of Tochi." His possessions had been (to enumerate them in Domesday order) in Northamptonshire, Leicestershire, Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Yorkshire, and Lincolnshire, with a church in Derby (surveyed under Nottinghamshire), and a hall in Lincoln. This last, it may be observed, with some few of the manors, he held with his "nepos" Ralph, perhaps a Ralph, son of Hubert, who appears with him as a co-tenant in all the above named six counties except Yorkshire. The term "nepos" was always ambiguous, and afterwards came to signify sometimes the son of a married priest, sometimes a nephew, sometimes a grandson; and in this case, it was probably a grandson, the son of Geoffrey's elder married daughter. When Geoffrey Alselin died (he was alive in the Lincolnshire Survey taken at 1108, after Tinchebrai in 1106, and before 1109, when Robert son of Henry I. was created Earl of Gloucester, but which Hearne unfortunately attributes to the time of Henry II.), Ralph continued the name for two or three generations, while the second co-heiress (she was dead in 1131) carried her moiety of the large fee to her husband, Robert Caux, Calz, Cauz, or Cause. Their son and heir, another Robert, in his turn a great man, but he did not continue the name, the line ended with him, and the fee was still further divided, for, at his death in 1186, his two daughters, Constance and Matilda, who had married the two brothers, Adam fitz Peter and Thomas fitz Peter, became the co-heiresses.

The following is the line:—

The original Alselin fee in Yorkshire had consisted of Brampton and Cantley, Healaugh and Wighill, with Claims upon lands in Wadworth and Loversall, which Alselin managed to substantiate, on the plea apparently that his right was absolute for all that had belonged to Tochi. Some of these Yorkshire lands came to Adam fitz Peter on the death of his wife's father in 1186; and in Cantley accordingly where his interest had been a moiety of the manor in capite, it was reported in Kirkby's Survey, taken in the time of his grandson (p. 231), that the prior of Worksop, the abbot of Kirkstall, the prior of the hospital of St. Katherine of Lincoln, and the prior of Hampole held it then as a half fee by charter from Adam de Everingham, while at Wadworth (pp. 283, 365) the same Adam was reported as himself holding a knight's fee. But on the other hand, Healaugh, Loversall, and Wighill became a part of the Wallis fee. Thus we have sufficient indication of the different courses taken by the Yorkshire lands of Geoffrey Alselin: and as partially illustrating the ultimate course of some of the other lands of that Domesday tenant, it may be noted that Matilda de Caux gave to the Knights Templars of Temple Brewer the town and church of Rowston in Lincolnshire, which had belonged to Geoffrey Alselin, and that Robert de Everingham, who married her granddaughter and heiress, added the manor itself to the endowment of the grandmother.

Of the last years of Adam fitz Peter but little is on record. As an old man, and a man whose early days were those of peace, he took no part in the turbulence of the latter portion of the reign of Henry II., and had none of the crusading spirit of Richard I. But it appears that in 1194 he had a duel with one Simon de Lascelles about 24 carucates of land at Birkin, and was the victor (Pipe Roll, 5 Richard). The duel was, however, probably fought by proxy.

On the death of Adam fitz Peter in 1207, the rights in his paternal lands passed to John his son, but those of Matilda the widow, and the right of her marriage, fell to the Crown. They were so held for fourteen years, when in 1221 (5 Henry III.) Matilda was allowed to have seisin of her land, but only by paying a fine of £700. After nearly three years longer, and when she had been a widow seventeen years, she remarried in 1223 (8 Henry III.), her second husband (from whom she received in dower the manor of Winterburn in Gloucestershire) being Ralph fitz Stephen, probably a collateral descendant of the royal chamberlain of Henry II., and not the chamberlain himself, as erroneously stated in Thoroton's Nottinghamshire, III., 207, and more recently in the Yorkshire Archæological Journal, IV., 228; for that functionary had died heirless in 3 John [1201]. But notwithstanding her remarriage, Matilda de Caux appears to have kept her paternal estates in her own hands; and when she died, which she did within the year, all devolved upon her son, John de Birkin, who on 25 May, 8 Henry III. (1224), gave security for 300 marks for his seisin, and did his homage.

When, in 1207, John de Birkin confirmed the gifts of his father to the monks of Pontefract (322 P.), his wife and the mother of his children was Johanna. Nothing is on record as to who she was, or even whether she survived him. Some authorities say that she predeceased him, that he remarried with Agnes, daughter and heir of Hugh de Flammaville, and that his second wife survived him. But all this is a result of a disregard of dates, for Agnes who was in 1202 already the wife of William de Percy, could not have been the widow of a man who did not die till 1227 (see the Pedigree). She was, in fact, the wife of his uncle and namesake, John de Birkin, third son of Peter fitz Asolf.

His son Thomas, who succeeded him, died in 1230, leaving widow Johanna, and an only sister Isabella; and the last three months of the year witnessed a complete revolution. On 10 October, 1230, the lands, goods, and chattels of Thomas de Birkin were committed to Robert de Lexington, as escheator; on 21 November, Robert Everingham gave security for 200 marks to have seisin; and in December, Henry de Longchamps gave 50 marks for the marriage of the widow. Thus the name of Birkin as lord of Birkin disappeared.

Isabella, the sister of Thomas de Birkin, inherited, and Robert de Everingham, in her right, possessed the domain for fifteen years. Dying in 1245, he left three young sons, Adam, John, and Robert, the eldest of whom was but fourteen years old; so that when he came of age in 1252, his paternal lands had been in the hands of the King for seven years. His mother seems to have retained her own and her dower; and when she also died, a few months after her son had come of age, the Everingham lands came to Adam, while his mother had given her own manor of Birkin to her second son John. Adam thus became a wealthy grandee; and on August 12, 1252, he did homage for the lands of his mother, except the manor of Birkin, which she had reserved as the second brother's portion. Thus, having been united since 1230 only, the interests in the Yorkshire and Nottinghamshire properties became once more diverse, Adam removing to his ancient paternal inheritance, and establishing his seat at Laxton or Lexington, and John having from his mother the manor and advowson of Birkin. So that there were from 1252 two distinct families of Everingham, that at Laxton and these at Birkin, a fact frequently overlooked; but we have to deal with the Birkin Everinghams only.

At his mother's death in 1252, Adam, her eldest son (born 1231) had just come of age, so that Robert, the youngest of the three, could not have been more than 18 or 19 years old. But his youth notwithstanding, a dated charter (487 S.) of 12 June, 1255, represents him as rector of Birkin, some time before he could even have reached the canonical age for orders. How his institution—if he were instituted at all—was managed is not clear; for he does not appear in Gray's Register as having been legally placed there; yet, nevertheless, there he was in June, 1255, in full possession, "parson of Birkin." The archbishop, who had been but feeble during the previous year or two, was is dead, and it may well be, that during the feebleness of the primate Robert had taken possession of the church in exercise of a kind of hereditary right, as—practically defying anyone to remove him—the parson of Kellington had done a few years before. For it is a remarkable fact that there were at least three hereditary parsons of Kellington—John, Thomas, and Alexander—grandfather, father, and son—holding that rectory from at least 1185 to 1244, when a compromise was effected. The interests in the living were then divided as a result of the masterfulness of Archbishop Gray; and Robert de Melburn, who had been presented by the master of the Knights Templars, being made rector, Alexander was continued as vicar.

This hereditary succession, which was a practice common enough at the time of archbishop Geoffrey, was an outcome of the fact that such a living as that of Birkin was endowed out of the family estates of the squire, and was practically intended to be a provision for a younger son, should one be properly qualified at the time of the vacancy. It was a practice which the deceased archbishop (he died in the palace of the bishop of London at Fulham on 1st May, 1255, and was interred on the 15th in York Minster,) had made strenuous efforts to abolish, but yet in his latest days, while indeed his last breath was, as it were, passing away, it seems once more to have sprung up at Birkin as vigorous as ever. Upon an inquisition as to the right of Presentation, which was made after the death of Robert (Yorkshire Inquisitions II., No. 63, 5 March, 1289), the jurors returned that "the lady Isabel de Everingham gave the manor of Birkin, with all manner of its appurtenances, and with the advowson of the church to Sir John de Everingham her son, who last presented to the church Robert de Everingham, his brother, upon whose presentation Sir Walter de Gray, then Archbishop of York, admitted and instituted him, and he held it for his whole life."

This return is corroborated by the fact that when her own Inquisition was taken (36 Henry III. [1252]), the lady Isabel held nothing in Yorkshire, and only some of the Nottinghamshire properties. But considering the absence from Archbishop Gray's Register of any record of the presentation, and bearing in mind that the supposed presentee was not of canonical age in 1255, I cannot think that this return can represent the exact circumstances of the case as they had occurred thirty-four years previously. For the absence of the testimony of the patron John, who had been long since dead, was a factor which militated against the full ascertainment of the truth.

When the living thus became vacant, Adam the son of John I succeeded his father, and the presentation was in his hands.¹ But Adam being excommunicate, could not exercise the privilege; on which archiepiscopal official, Hugh Sampson, was instituted, and held living for ten months, when Adam's disqualification having been removed, Sampson resigned, and Adam presented. The presentee held the appointment for nearly thirty years, and on his death, Thomas Everingham was appointed. But the former rector, Robert, was forgotten, and forty years after his decease, in 2 Edward III. (1328), the grandson and namesake of John de Everingham, Robert's brother, founded the chantry of St. Mary in a south aisle added to Birkin Church "for the souls of Robert, formerly rector, of Adam (the donor's father), of John de Everingham (the brother of Robert), and Beatrice his wife, of Lucy, wife of Adam de Everingham, and of Thomas de Everingham, now rector" (Dodsworth xcii., 88). And thus, after eight generations, this descendant of Asolf, in a female line, completed Birkin Church much as it stands to-day.

The descendants of John de Everingham, who thus had his mother's inheritance, remained at Birkin for at least eight or ten generations, and though I am anxious not to extend this paper unnecessarily, I would point out that exactly two centuries after the date of this foundation, on Oct. 14, 1527, by will proved at York, a later John de Everingham (Kt., of Birkin), among other pious gifts bequeathed the sum of 6s. 8d. to the Friars of Pontefract, "to praye for my sall" (York Wills, ix., 417). His successor, Sir Henry, died 17 March, 37 Henry VIII. [1546], and by the Inquisition taken after his death, it appears that he left two daughters and two sons; Thomas, a legitimate son, aged three years at the death of his father, inherited the manor of Birkin, and to Henry, his bastard son, his father gave the manor of Knottingley, in general tail (Yorkshire Archæological Journal, xi., 439).

(2) Thomas, the second son of Peter fitz Asolf, who had married the elder sister of Matilda de Caux, witnessed the charters of Adam his elder brother more frequently than either of his younger brethren, and his relationship to Adam is generally placed upon the record. As Glover states, he had received from his brother Adam grants of lands in Leeds, from which he assumed that name. He tested several charters in the seigniorial fasciculus of the Pontefract Chartulary (5 P.,

(1) I may add here that the predecessor of Robert, one William, occurs (487 S.) as "parson of Birkin," and that several other early rectors occur as signatories in the Rievaulx Chartulary.

10 P., 12 P., 13 P.), which were all at or soon after the date of the consecration of the monks' new buildings in 1159; and no other brother appears with them in these documents. Thomas also tested the charter of Jordan Foliot giving to the monks of Pontefract the West Mill of Norton. In each case, and always as "Thomas his brother," he follows Adam fitz Peter, as he does also in a Final Concord concerning Peckfield in 1184, given rather inaccurately in the Monasticon, No. xxxiv. His descendants remained long in the Leeds district, and continued the name till 6 Henry VI. (see Glover's Visitation, p. 302, and ante, pp. 19, 20).

(3) The third son, John, tests Adam's grants to the monks of Pontefract of a yearly deer and two oaks from Birkin park, with very many other charters of a less important character. Though he tests 325 P. as John fitz Peter, he is generally called John de Birkin, and is thus very liable to be confused (and has been confused, as I have already shown)¹ with his nephew John, the lord of the fee. His predominant interest, however, was in the East Riding. In 2 John (1200) he gave to the King ten marks to have a day when he might appear before the justices at Westminster in a plea of land against Robert de Bullers and Hylary [Trusbut] his wife (Oblatis, 102). Between 1207 and 1210 he witnessed the charter (213 G.) from Peter de Brus to his knights and free tenants of Cleveland, and he was the second husband of Agnes de Flammaville, daughter and co-heiress of Hugh de Flammaville, and widow of William de Percy of Kildale, who (Fines 4 John, No. 83) was alive so late as in 1202. The date of John de Birkin's death does not appear, but in 483 G. the canons of Guisbrough are said to have had the custody of his land. In one Pontefract Charter (405 P.) he is styled "Sir," but as that charter must be at least before 1200, and as he is so styled nowhere else, there can be no hesitation in considering this title as merely complimentary. Such titles of courtesy were not unusual at the time.

(4) Peter, the next brother, adopted the names of "de Birkin" and "de Bretton," i.e. Burton Salmon. The only charter of Adam's which I find him to have tested is that of the annual gift to the monks of a deer and two oaks, which (325 P.) was the only one of the series tested by his next elder brother John. He had a son Peter, who had three sons, William, named in 493 S. (ultimately Sir William, 224 P.), Thomas, and Adam. Sir William (Finibus, 253) was one of the securities for Roald fitz Alan, constable of Richmond, and he seems to have left only a daughter. Of Thomas no issue is named, and like Sir William, he appears to have died early, for some property at Broughton in Craven, in which both William and Thomas had been interested as tenants of the monks, ultimately fell to Adam, and was in his possession in 1226 (514 P.); but I have not succeeded in tracing Adam's descendants.

(1) The original source of this confusion is a document called the Percy Feodary, which has been printed in the Surtees Edition of the Whitby Chartulary, p. 699. From the Feodary Dodsworth copied it (xcv., 50), and it has been taken from that collection into the Guisbrough Chartulary (232). I have seen it in other places, all manifestly derived from Dodsworth.

In the same manor of Bretton (now Burton Salmon) was another family which I cannot help thinking was of the Asolf blood, though I have not obtained absolute proof; but like the William de Prestok group, they would not have tested the Birkin charters so frequently unless there had been a family connection. A Hugh (probably Hugh fitz Asolf) had a son Pigot, from whom their estate in Burton Salmon obtained the name of the "Pigot fee." Pigot's son Geoffrey, who after the death of his father became Pigot, and ultimately retained the name as an hereditary surname only, married Agnes de Pollington, their heir being a second Agnes, who married Serlo, the younger son of a third Bretton family; and all these so frequently test the Adam fitz Peter charters to both Pontefract and Rievaulx, as to show that they had more than a neighbourly interest in them, though there is not sufficient evidence to indicate its character clearly (see the Pedigree).

(5) William tests the charters concerning Shitlington and Harden, signing between Thomas and Roger. And as I find no more of him, it may be that his position in the family might have been senior to that of Peter. Either he died early, or he settled in some manor from which he adopted a territorial name, of which I have not ascertained such particulars as would enable me to select him from the crowd of undistinguished bearers of the same name. He does not ever appear, I think, as de Birkin, nor do I trace whether he contracted any matrimonial alliance. It is possible, however, that he is the William de Preston who was the head of the very important family at Great Preston, between Allerton and Kippax.

(6) Roger, although he always signs last of the sons of Peter, was a much more important man than several of his brothers. Indeed, John and Roger, the only two of the four younger sons of Peter fitz Asolf, of whose matrimonial connections I have been able to gather particulars, appear with considerable frequency, John being almost always accompanied by Roger, and always preceding him. Roger de Birkin signs more of the Rievaulx charters than either of his brothers, and he is the only one, except the eldest, Adam, who made an independent grant to the monks there. This was of land in Shitlington 96 R.) about 1165, for the soul of his father, the quantity granted being 15 acres, the same as that given for the same purpose by Adam; but it was given in a capacity inferior to that of Adam, for the elder brother had to confirm the grant (97 R.). Roger de Birkin is recorded in the Liber Niger of 1166 as holding a third of a half knight's fee in the fee of Ralph Pagnell.

Like all his brethren, except perhaps William, he attained an advanced age. Nothing is known of any wife of his youth, but in his maturity, he married Maud, daughter of Roger, son of Richard Touche, with whom he received the manor of Over Shitlington, given by her father "the day that I took my journey towards the Holy Land with King Richard," the charter being witnessed by, among others, Richard de Tonge, probably a cousin, a son of Richard de Tweng. The couple must have had but a short married life, for it seems to have been he rather than his nephew of the same name, who, between 1202 and 1207, married Alice, widow of Robert Pictavensis. The exact date is perhaps not now ascertainable, on account of the loss of some of the records of this portion of the reign of King John; but that the marriage was between those dates is evident from a comparison of the Fines 81 and 294 in Surtees, Vol. xciv.; for by the former, it appears that Robert Pictavensis was alive and in possession on August 13, 1202, and by the latter, that he was dead, that Roger, his brother¹ and heir, had succeeded him, and that his widow Alice had re-married; all before November 18, 1207. At the date of his marriage with the widow of Robert Pictavensis, this youngest brother of Adam fitz Peter must thus have been of very full years, and it is not to be expected that there was issue of the union.

Besides the charters in which he is mentioned as a witness in the accompanying Table, Roger tests one to Rievaux (344 R.), which was given by Jordan son of Matthew fitz Saxe at least as early as 1170, and in which he is called Roger de Birkin by the name of his brother's manor; and late in the century he tests 379 P. and 405 P., in each of which, following Roger de Lascy, constable of Chester, and being styled "brother" to John, he is completely identified and distinguished from his nephew Roger. See also Monasticon, No. ix.

Roger died in 1221, having survived his father fifty-six years, and his elder brother fourteen years.

ROBERT SANDALL, OF TADCASTER.

In Dei nomine Amen: quinto die mensis Junij Anno Domini Millesimo ccccc^{mo} xiiij^{mo}, Ego Robertus Sandall de Tadcastre, compos mentis et sane memorie, proponens Dei gratia limina Francie cum nobili Domino Henrico Comite Northumbr' visitare, condo testamentum

(1) Mr. Scatcherd gives the inscription on his tombstone as "Orate pro Anima Johannis Topcliffe quondam Capitalis Justiciarii Domini Regis, Hen. VII. & VIII. item Magistri Monetæ qui quidem obiit xij die Decembris Anno Domini mccccxiiij cujus Animæ propicietur Deus." This will is remarkable because the Testator does not bequeath his soul to the Blessed Virgin, and there are none of the usual religious bequests.

Thoresby Society.

REPORT FOR 1897.

THE Council of the Thoresby Society have the pleasure to present their Ninth Annual Report. During the year four Life and twenty-three Annual Members have joined the Society, and the number on the Roll at the end of the year is 283, of which forty-eight are Life and 235 Annual. In response to a large number of circular letters sent out by the Hon. Treasurer, it is gratifying to note that since the last Annual Meeting twenty-two Libraries have joined the Society, and as their membership does not commence until 1898, they are not included in the preceding numbers.

A third part of the "Miscellanea with Index" for 1895, completing Vol. IV., and containing the account of the Foundation of Kirkstall Abbey from the original MS. in the Bodleian Library, and another part of the "Leeds Parish Church Registers" for 1896, have been issued during the year, and there are now in the press the first portion of the Kirkstall Abbey Coucher Book and further parts of "Miscellanea" and "Registers," and it is hoped that these will be issued to the members during the summer.

On the 9th March, Mr. Hy. Crowther, F.R.M.S., read a paper on "The River Aire and its Associations," illustrated by Lantern Views; on the 23rd March, Mr. W. H. Witherby, M.A., read a paper on "The Rising of the North in Yorkshire," with special reference to Markenfield Hall and Norton Conyers; and on the 13th April, Mr. Jas. E. Bedford, F.G.S., gave a paper on "Early Printed Books and Ancient Bindings," and exhibited a large number of specimens. The papers were very interesting and much appreciated.

In May, June, and July, Excursions were made to Fountains Abbey, Thornhill Church and Hall, Dewsbury Church and Moot Hall, Spofforth Castle, Plumptre Church, Ribston Park, and Goldsborough Hall and Church. The monuments and stained glass in Thornhill, Dewsbury, Plumptre, and Goldsborough Churches are specially interesting, and were much admired, as were the front and interior of Goldsborough Hall.

The Society is much indebted to Mrs. Lamb, Major Dent, the Hon. and Rev. J. W. Lascelles, the Rev. Wm. Pearson, Canon Grenside, Canon Lowther Clarke, and Mr. S. J. Chadwick, for courteously receiving the Society and describing the various objects of interest, and to Messrs. W. H. Witherby, F. W. Bedford, and E. K. Clark, who had charge of the excursions.

On the 28th June, Mr. W. H. Broadhead kindly showed a party of members the Templars' crosses upon houses in Leeds belonging to the Manor of Whitkirk, and provided plans of the district, giving the position of the houses.

The rooms in Park Street have been taken on a lease for five years, with option to purchase, and have been found very suitable for the purposes of the Society, but other Scientific and Literary Societies, with one exception, have not availed themselves of the advantages offered to them, and therefore the maintenance of the rooms is more costly than was expected.

During the year the Council of the Society, with that of the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, went as a deputation to the Leeds City Council to urge the preservation of the Old Grammar School Buildings in North Street, but no decision has yet been come to.

Members who have not got a complete set of the Publications are reminded that a complete set is of much more interest and value than odd numbers, and the Honorary Treasurer will be glad to supply bound volumes and parts at subscription price.

Lectures.

On March 9, Mr. H. Crowther, F.R.M.S., gave an admirable paper upon "The River Aire and its Associations." No description of this lecture could be adequate without a reproduction of the excellent photographs taken by the speaker himself, with which he illustrated the course of the river from its source to its mouth.

On March 30, Mr. Witherby read a paper on "The Rising of the North," with special reference to Markenfield and Norton Conyers, both visited at different times by members of the Society.

Mr. Witherby, at the outset, reminded his hearers that three or four months ago there appeared in the "Times" one or two remarkable articles, in which the writer (whom rumour claimed to be one of the most respected and gifted citizens of Leeds) sought to show the contrast even now existing between the North and South of England. At the present day, whatever might be his faults, the Yorkshireman considered himself not a whit less progressive than his southern fellows. His enterprise and keenness had converted the peaceful scenes of nature into busy hives of industry, and progress in thought had accompanied progress in other matters. But whatever might be true of these days, the past presented to us a very different picture. Prior to the industrial revolution of the end of the last and the beginning of this century, industry and manufactures were centred in the south rather than in the north. From the time that William the Conqueror ravaged the Vale of York with fire and sword, the North had, as a rule, fought for a losing side. It was further removed from the civilising influences of the Continent; it was continually exposed to inroads of barbarism from across the Border. The very architecture of the northern castles down to a comparatively late date pointed to a ruder state of civilisation. The feudal condition of society lived longer and died harder in the north. Finally, it was in the north that the Reformation encountered the most strenuous resistance.

Mr. Witherby thought that under these circumstances it might not be interesting to briefly trace the history of what was probably the last attempt of the feudal baronage to assert claims to independence, and the last effort to restore by open force of arms the religion of the past. Quite recently the Thoresby Society had visited Norton Conyers at Markenfield Hall, and Sir Richard Norton and Thomas Markenfield were, if not nominally the heads, at any rate two of the chief leaders of the unfortunate rebellion. Mr. Witherby proceeded to describe the events and movements which led up to the Rising of the North in 1569, and then gave a graphic and highly interesting account of the rebellion itself, of its failure, and of the punishment of the leaders.

On April 13, Mr. J. E. Bedford, F.G.S., gave a paper on "Early Printed Books and Ancient Bindings."

After some account of the earlier MSS., and of the writing and illumination of Bibles and books of devotion in the monasteries, Mr. Bedford passed to the period when printing had become general. The earliest specimen of printing from moveable type was done at Mayence, in 1454. It was the famous indulgence of Pope Nicholas V. to all who should contribute money to aid the King of Cyprus against the Turks. At Bruges many books were printed for the English market, and it was there that Caxton began to print. Mr. Bedford having sketched the early history of printing in Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, and England, devoted considerable attention to the craft of binding as practised on the Continent and at home. Fine binding, he said, had continued in France from mediæval times to the present day. That was due, in the first instance, to the foundation in Paris in the 15th century of the Guild of St. Jean Lateran. The residence of foreign binders in London was a source of grievance to English workmen in the sixteenth century, and the Stationers' Company passed a resolution that "The bookbinders that be Englishmen and freemen of the Citie of London should have work before strangers and foreigners," and further prayed for a statute against the foreigners, "or else the poor suppliants would be in case to be utterly ruined and undone." Interesting extracts were read from an article on the "Art of Bookbinding," which appeared in the "Studio," written by Mr. Cobden Sanderson. Mr. Sanderson was of opinion that a well-bound book should open and shut easily, and remain open with the leaves down at any page. For the majority of books he would have no binding at all, using simply stitches and paper wrapper, as the French most often did. He never used cloth leather was the only material for lasting work, and morocco the best of all. Another writer remarked on the significant fact that although three and a half centuries had elapsed since the suppression of the monasteries, art, as applied to bookbinding, had not recovered from the blow it then received. Mr. Bedford drew attention to the many specimens of early books and beautiful bindings which he had set out for inspection by the audience. These included a reprint of "The Art of Dying," illustrating the struggles of the Christian in leaving this world, and some fine examples of early printing by the most noted craftsmen, amongst which were breviaries and missals from the famous Plantin Press at Antwerp, now in the possession of that city. Preserved as it was in old days, and known as the Plantin Museum, it should be seen by all book-lovers.

Excursions.

FOUNTAINS ABBEY.

The first excursion of the year was held on May 29th, 1897. Members visited Fountains Abbey, and inspected the front of Fountains Hall. No description is needed here of this well-known building; the party was under the charge of Mr. W. H. Witherby.

THORNHILL CHURCH, DEWSBURY PARISH CHURCH, AND MOOTHALL.

JUNE 26TH, 1897.

Members took train to Dewsbury, whence the party drove to Thornhill Church, where they were received by the Rector (Canon F. R. Grenside), and Mr. S. J. Chadwick, F.S.A., who furnished the party with a great deal of valuable information. The church is of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, and was carefully restored in 1877 by Mr. G. E. Street. The level of the floor under the tower is much higher than the level of the nave, which in its turn is higher than that of the chancel—a characteristic rare in ecclesiastical architecture. Much of the coloured glass in the church is old. The chantry window, put in at a time when the church was enlarged, 1492, contains glass similar in design to that in the parish churches of York, and it is filled with a somewhat materialised view of the general resurrection—bodies rising from graves and ascending a winding path to Heaven, which appears as a city set upon a hill surrounded with walls of gold. The east window (1499), representing the genealogy of Jesus Christ, is remarkable for the individuality displayed in the faces of monarchs and angels, and for the animation and vivacity given to the figures by the bold colouring of the artist. It was in the monuments that most interest was exhibited. Tombs in the Savile Chapel, north side of chancel and in the south aisle. In the Savile Chapel are fine monuments. Between the chancel and the chapel a lofty canopied monument, with effigies of Sir George Savile and his wife. There is a fine altar tomb, dated 1529, with the truly poetic inscription:—

“Bonys emonge stonys lys ful steyl,

Qwylst the sawles wanderis were that God wyle.”

I.H.S. anno Dñi millimo quingentesimo vgesimo nono.

Figures in oak, representing Sir John Savile and his two wives. A beautiful tomb of alabaster, with the effigies of a Knight and his lady of the time of Edw. IV. The armour a good example of the period. The earliest effigy in the church is that of a Knight of the Thornhill Family of the time of Edw. I., cross-legged, a surcoat over his chain mail, his head under a canopy. Crosses.—Fine fragments: three of which have runic inscriptions upon them.

In the Rectory Grounds (access to which had been kindly granted by Canon F. R. Grenside) are the ruins of the ancient residence of the Saviles, surrounded by a moat. Thornhill Hall was taken by Col. Fairfax and destroyed with fire, an account of which is found in a pamphlet printed for Robert White in 1648. An old plan of Thornhill Manor was exhibited. Admirable letters from besiegers to defenders were read.

The party drove to Dewsbury Parish Church, where members were welcomed by Canon H. Lowther Clarke. The oldest portions are the pillars and arches of the nave. The clustered columns of the north side belong to the 13th century; those of the south side are ruder, and probably of a later date. The old chancel was pulled down to make room for the eastward extension of the Church. Stones.—The so-called cross of Paulinus which stood on the old chancel fixed in 1810, in place of another said to be a copy of the original cross of Paulinus. Fragment, with interlaced work on two sides, figures of a human being and of a monster to be traced on the other sides. An interesting stone, called the Saxon tomb, with low sides and sloping top, reminds the visitor of the so-called Danish tomb in Peterborough Cathedral. Other stones, some of which represent the Miracle of Cana of Galilee, and bear the figures of our Lord and His Apostles, and another of which represents the Virgin and Child, are thought to have possibly formed part of the base of the original cross of Paulinus. Fine tombstone or coffin lid of one of the Soothills, of Soothill Hall, bearing a floridated cross with two birds. Numerous interesting tombstones and monuments, with armorial bearings, crosses, &c. ¹Glass.—Fine examples of 13th, 14th, and 15th century glass are to be seen in the north transept. The registers commence in 1538. The members are highly indebted to Mr. S. J. Chadwick, F.S.A., for his able and interesting description. In the churchyard has been erected the old Northern Double Doorway, from the north side of the chancel, adjoining a noble fire-place preserved from the old vicarage. The Moot Hall (13th century) erected for

SPOFFORTH, GOLDSBOROUGH HALL AND CHURCH, AND KNARESBOROUGH CASTLE.

JULY 24TH, 1897.

Quitting the train at Harrogate members drove to Spofforth Castle where the ruins were described by Mr. W. H. Witherby. The manor was granted by the Conqueror to William de Percy, but the license to crenellate was not obtained till 1309, in which year also the Percy bought the Alnwick estate from Anthony de Bek, Bishop of Durham. In 1408, after the death of Henry, the first Earl, on the field of Bramham Moor, Spofforth was conferred on Sir Thos. Rokeby, then Sheriff of Yorkshire, but was soon recovered by the original holders. In 1461 Henry Percy, his brother, and Sir W. Plumpton, his steward, fell on the bloody field of Towton, and the castle, as Leland informs us, was "sore defaced" by the victorious Yorkists. It was recovered, however, in 1470, but possibly not inhabited by the family till the time of Elizabeth, when it was repaired by Henry, Lord Percy. The castle was finally demolished in or after the great Civil War. The ruins date from three periods, and present interesting problems to the archæologist. It is hoped that a paper will appear in the Miscellanea dealing with this castle.

Spofforth Church.—Mr. Pearson (the Rector) described the church, which is Norman, and has been restored. There were noted—Tomb of knight in chain armour, John de Plumpton, early 14th century; fragment of pre-Norman cross; Percy Arms of north wall of chancel; two western bays of N. aisle.

After driving through Ribston Park (open by the kindness of Major Dent) the members walked through the celebrated gardens, and proceeded to Goldsborough Hall, where they were hospitably received by Mrs. Lamb, and viewed this beautiful Jacobean house. The Rector (the Hon. and Rev. W. Lascelles) then conducted the party to the church, and pointed out the two magnificent effigies of knights in chain armour dating from the 14th century. After tea at Knaresborough and a brief inspection of the castle, the party returned to Leeds by the 8-37 train.

The Thoresby Society.

The Roman Milestone, found at Castleford,

NOW IN THE MUSEUM OF THE LEEDS PHILOSOPHICAL AND LITERARY SOCIETY.

[Reprinted from Report for 1897-8.]

BY F. HAVERFIELD, M.A., F.S.A.

THE Roman Milestone, which is the subject of the following note, was found in or about 1880 at Castleford. The place of the discovery was near the south end of Beancroft Road; the occasion was the laying of a public drain four or five feet below the surface. Beancroft Road almost exactly overlies a piece of Roman road, a part, namely, of the great highway often but erroneously called Watling Street, which led from York past the "stations" of Tadcaster, Castleford, and Doncaster to Lincoln. The milestone must, therefore, have been found very close to a Roman road, and in all probability, very close to its original position. The "station" at Castleford occupied the site of the present All Saints' Church and Rectory and Castle-house, close to the river Aire, just half a mile north of the place where the milestone was found. The stone came into the possession of Mr. Joseph Brewerton, formerly town-surveyor of Castleford, now of Argyle Road, Boscomb, and was set up by him in the garden of a house which he was then building between Beancroft Street and Love Lane. This house he called Storrsville,—the ordnance map calls it Storesvilla, and it is now known as Landsdown Villa. It is about one hundred yards from the spot where the stone was unearthed. Here I found it in September, 1897, purchased it, and presented it to the Leeds Museum. I have to thank Mr. W. E. Garforth, of Halesfield, Normanton; Mr. R. Birdsall, of Northampton, and Mr. Brewerton, for information concerning the stone, communicated to me at various times before 1897.

The stone is a block of sandstone, about five feet long and ten inches in diameter. It bears two inscriptions, one at each end. When first erected, in the reign of the Emperor Decius Traianus (A.D. 249-251), it was inscribed with his name and titles. After his death it was inverted, and reinscribed at the other end with the names and titles of his successors, the conjoint emperors, Vibius Gallus and Vibius Volusianus (A.D. 251–253). The inscriptions were first published from an imperfect copy by the late Mr. W. T. Walkin, of Liverpool, in the Academy for February 28th, 1885, and in the Archæological Journal xlii. (1885), p. 154. I reprinted his readings in the Ephemeris Epigraphica (vii., Nos. 1104, 1105). I have now been able to examine the stone myself, and have been aided by squeezes which Mr. H. Crowther, curator of the Leeds Museum, has made for me.

The inscriptions appear to be as follows:—

(a) IMPC	and	(b) IMPP
CMQ		CCVIBIO
DECIO		GALLOETCV
PFNG		VOLVSIA
5 FCM		5 NOPF
QFRV		AVGG EB
CO		MPXX

The inscriptions appear to be as follows:—

- (a) Imp(eratore) C(aesare) C. M(essio) Q(uinto) Decio p(io) f(elici) Aug(usto), et C. M(essio) Q(uinto) Etru[s]co.
- (b) Imp(eratoribus) C(aesaribus) C. Vibio Gallo et C. V(ibio) Volusiano p(iis) f(elicibus) Aug(ustis), Eb(uraco) m(illia) p(assuum) XX.

The indication of distance from Eburācum (York) is interesting. By the line of the Roman road through Tadcaster to Aberford, the distance from York to Castleford is about twenty English miles. The Itinerary gives twenty-one Roman miles (pp. 475, 478 Wess.). The Roman mile was a trifle shorter than the English mile, so that the agreement is fairly close. It will be even closer, if we assume that our milestone was the twenty-second, and that the twenty-first milestone stood half a mile north of Castleford “station,” just as this stands half a mile south. In that case, the actual distance from York to Castleford would have been, by the Roman road, twenty-one and a half Roman miles.

The streets and sites in Castleford mentioned above may be conveniently seen on the twenty-five inch maps of the Ordnance Survey for the West Riding of Yorkshire, No. CCXXXIV., 7 and 11.

Notes on Ralph Thoresby's Pedigree.

By A. S. ELLIS.

IT is a rather invidious and painful task to subject to criticism a well-known and generally accepted pedigree of our respectable local antiquary, Ralph Thoresby, but sooner or later it would have to be done. He himself lived at a time when all but implicit faith was reposed in the work of former heralds and genealogists, and he himself admitted in his Ducatus Leodiensis many pedigrees of which the earlier generations are to us obviously fictitious. But we have so much respect for the memory and character of Thoresby that we feel sure that had he been living now he would have welcomed and encouraged an inquiry of this kind. It is the lot of very few even noble families to possess a pedigree so ancient as the time of Henry VI., which was the date assigned by Roger Gale to the "Rotulus Historico-Genealogicus" in his day (1722) existing in the Cottonian Library, which he had engraved and inserted in his edition of the Registrum Honoris de Richmond. This venerable document, which seems to have disappeared in the lamentable fire of 1731, was drawn up to show the descent of George Thoresby of Thoresby, from "Aykefrith," the Anglo-Danish Thane, and also his connection through the de Staveleys with the noble houses of Fitzhugh, Marmion, and St. Quintin. Gale had it engraved for his work, preserving the arrangement, with the coats of arms and the names in roundels, but clearly not in facsimile as regards the writing. This pedigree, though drawn up with much care and skill, and from evidences which have probably long disappeared, when tested, fails in divers places. It is doubtful whether our genial antiquary had ever seen, or even knew of the existence of this Roll, though the pedigree supplied him by Peter le Neve Norroy, and all others I have seen have been founded on it with certain variations and additions as well as corrupt readings.

Unfortunately the antiquary's own pedigree, as printed in his 'Ducatus,' directly it is taken in hand breaks into three pieces where faultily joined:—

- 1.—The Rotulus, with its continuation to the end of the family of Thoresby, of Thoresby.
- 2.—The branch at Woolhouse.
- 3.—The branch at East Cottingwith, and afterwards of Leeds.

We will consider these seriatim with some notes and comments on the 'Rotulus,' which need not be reprinted here entire.

I. THORESBY, OF THORESBY.

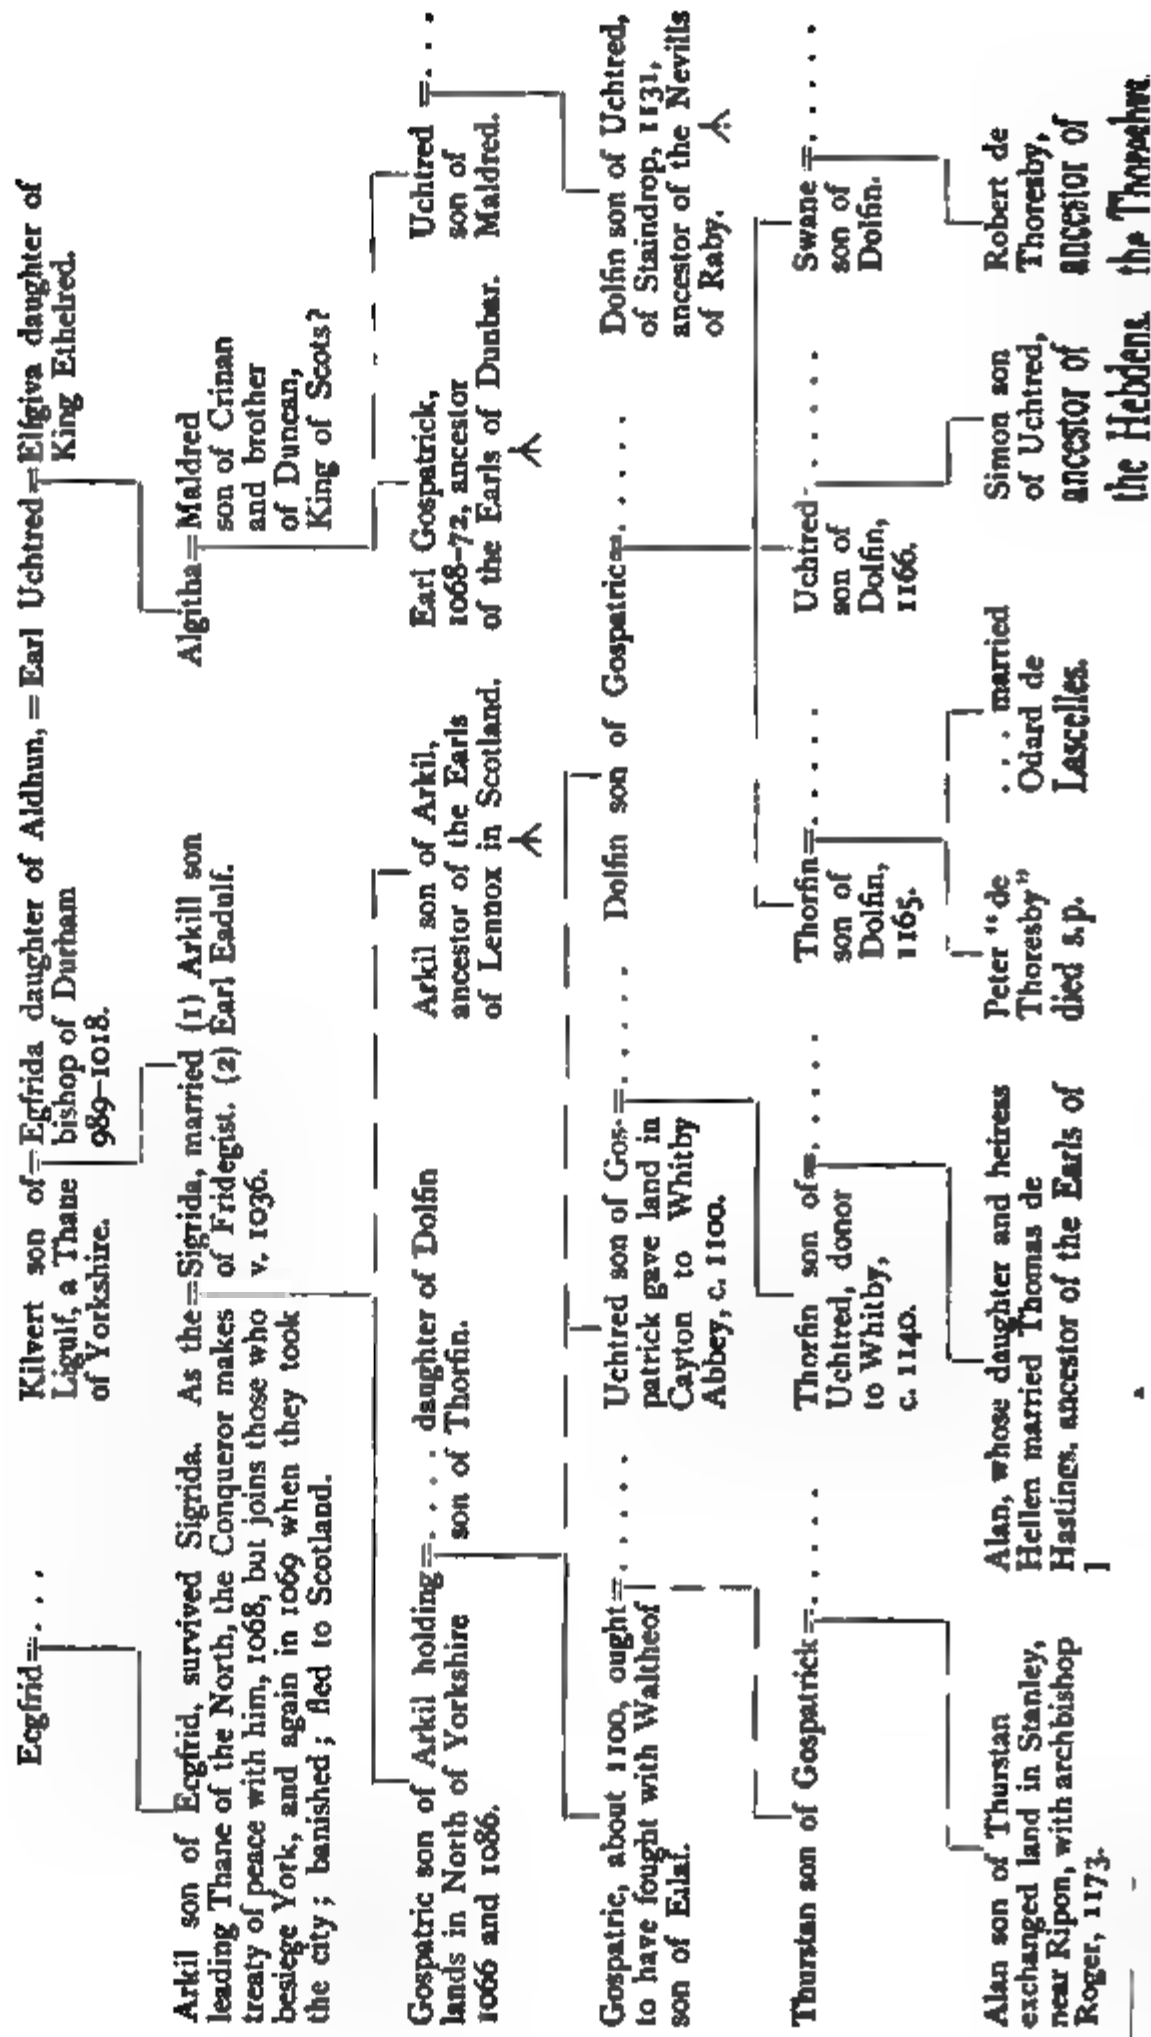

The "Aykefrith" who heads this old genealogy is, of course, Ecgfrid, father of the Thane Arkil mentioned in the monk Simeon's account of the Siege of Durham, but whether the latter was identical with the Domesday tenant of that name in North Riding, though it must be admitted highly probable, cannot be proved. Anyhow Gospatric, son of Arkil, also named by Simeon, had succeeded before 1086 to eight manors in Richmondshire, which had at least belonged to an Arkil, on the day King Edward the Confessor died, as also did Aldfield, Bickerton, and Burton, a fragment only, however, of the great estate of the powerful Thane Arkil. The interesting fact to us is that Gospatric was holding in 1086, Thoresby of the Earl Alan, and as a King's Thane, among others, Farnham, and if the same man, Cayton and Allerston. The Cleveland family at Allerston seems to have the best claim to represent Gospatric the son of Arkil, and a brother named Arkil has long done duty as the progenitor of the Scottish Earls of Lennox. I herewith give a table showing these claims without, of course, vouching for their truth.

Great and influential men like Arkil were frequently seized upon and made use of by genealogists to hang on many descendants, though his was not an uncommon name at that date, for even his wife had a former husband named Arkil (the son of Fridegist).

The Thoresby pedigree makes Gospatric, son of Arkil, the father of one Dolphyn, which is very plausible because, though not named by Simeon, we learn from him that Gospatric married a daughter of Dolfin, son of Thorfin, and it goes on to give Dolfin three sons:—Torphyn, Swayn, and Ughtred.¹

(1) I have reason to believe that this Ughtred was second, not third, son of Dolfin, and the ancestor of the de Hebdens, to whom Roger de Mowbray gave the manor of Hebden-in-Craven (History of Craven, old ed. 366), after 1166: Robert de Bulmer, a carucate in Burnsall (ib. 368); and Aalis de Rumeli, all her lands in Conyngston (ib. 389), the last before 1166; as Ughtred de Cungeston is returned as then holding six car. of the Skipton fee (Liber Niger, 322). Whitaker says, without giving his authority, that he was a son (? grandson) of Gospatric de Rigton in Knaresborough forest, and father of Simon de Hebden, of which there is ample proof in the Cartulary of Fountains.

Scheme.

This Torphyn fitz Dolphyn de Thoresby gave "Odiard de lascelles" a carucate and a half in Kerperby in marriage as freely as he held these of Monsire Walter Ingelram, so the Pedigree states. Under the heading of "Langerschire Wapentake" (i.e., Hang in which Thoresby was,) in the Pipe Roll of 12 Hen. II. (1165-6), Torfin fil. Dolfin is returned as owing one marc, a fine entered on the Plea Rolls. This is a rather late date for him. Torphyn de Thoresby "engendra" for the roll is in French, Piers de Thoresby who died without issue.

Swayn, the second son of Dolphyn, may very possibly have been the "Suane son of Dolfin," who gave a carucate of land in Horton in Ribblesdale to Jervaulx Abbey. Ralph, son of Suane, it appears, also gave two oxgangs there, and a William, son of Arkill, two more¹. The pedigree gives Swayn four sons and a daughter:—(1) Robert de Thoresby. (2) Rauf de Langacre (qu. named just above). (3) Thomas fitz Swayn, more probably the eldest son (made father of Adam and Alan de Staveley). (4) Elys (Elias) de Swynford, and Gonella (Gunilda), wife of John de Morville, by whom she had William and Herbert de Morville and a daughter Agnes.

Robert de Thoresby had Thoresby, for the pedigree states that Piers de Thoresby, because he had no issue, gave his lands to his cousin Robert. It seems he followed his father's example, and was a liberal donor to the neighbouring monks of Jervaulx, giving them, it is stated, no less than two carucates at Ryd (Reeth), but of this I find no mention in the Monasticon. He witnessed two charters of Alexander de Crevequer in the Mon. Angl. I., 399. Robert had three sons:—(1) Thomas de Thoresby named Depedale. (2) Richard de Thoresby, father of Uchtred. (3) Thorphyn de Thoresby, also called Depedale, named, I suppose, from the romantic Deepdale in the parish of Romaldkirk. All that I have found to give these names reality again is that in 11 Hen. III., Thomas de Depedale called Rannulf fitz Henry to warrant half a carucate and six acres in Horton (in Ribblesdale)². The pedigree states that Roland Haget "lord of Knaresburgh," gave to this Thomas and his heirs for ever no less than twelve carucates in Staveley. If this was a fact it more likely refers to Thomas, father of Adam de Staveley (dead 1218)³.

(1) Burton's Mon. Ebor., p. 369; Mon. Angl., vol. i., p. 879.

(2) Harrison's Gilling West, p. 384.

(3) It is not known that Roland Haget was lord, or rather constable, of Knaresborough, but he witnessed the charter of William Haget confirming to Fountains Abbey lands in Dacre given by his father, Bertram Haget (Mon. Angl. i., 755); also Bertram's foundation charter of Helagh Priory (ib. ii., 287). Adam de Staveley, lord of Staveley, Farnham, and Lofthouse, near Knares-

These statements and the pedigree are clearly founded on some ea pleadings which are not on the existing Rolls so far as I know.

Richard de Thoresby, the second son, had Thoresby, and as was apparently all he held, may be considered the first of the fam to have lived there. Thoresby', in the parish of Aysgarth, lies Wensleydale, below Bolton Castle, the seat of the Scropes, and wi Carperby so frequently mentioned forms one township called Carperb cum-Thoresby. Two farms are called High and Low Thoresby. Fro Domesday Book (1086), we learn that Gospatric had (in 1066), an has again of Earl (Alan) one carucate in "Toresbi," but it is waste besides this there were two other carucates in "Toresbi" berwicks c the Earl's manor of (West) Witun, but who was holding these we ar not informed. It would take much research to trace the exact descen of these lands, especially as the tenure became very complicated by subinfeudation, as we shall see in the case of the Rector of Aysgarth

Uchtred de Thoresby, the pedigree proceeds, married Lorette, daughter of Sir Henry de Preston, his neighbour, whose arms are given as azure, a bend between five cross crolets fitchée arg. They had

Sir Adam de Thoresby², who by Sibill, daughter of Sir Randolfe fitz Randolfe, of Spennythorn, was father of William de Thoresby, who espoused Quenilde, daughter of his neighbour, Sir Nicholas de Gertheston, i.e. Garriston. (Arms, Barry of eight, azure and argent, and a label of five points gules.) All this is probable enough. Their son, borough, Dent and Sedburgh was dead (1218), leaving a daughter and heiress, then wife of Ranulf fitz Henry, ancestor of the Lords Fitzhugh, of whom the manor of Thoresby was afterwards held.

In the Testa de Nevill, p. 380, we learn that a contemporary Adam de Staveley was holding Ravenswick in Cumberland, and that Henry I. gave it to his ancestor, Adam son of Alan! This is a very curious coincidence, but there is another Staveley in Cumberland.

(1) This is not the only Thoresby in England, there are four others:—one in Cumberland, another in Notts., and two, North and South Thoresby, in Lincolnshire. According to Dr. Whitaker, there was even another Thoresby in Richmondshire, near Spennithorn, but I have been unable to find it (Hist. Richm. i., 370). Thoresby in Cumberland was given by Alan, son of Waltheof, son of the Earl Gospatric, to one Herbert, and a moiety of 'Derom' to Dolfin, son of Gospatric (Mon. Angl. i., 400). Herbert le Brun, the grantee, took the surname of de Thursby. (See Nicholson and Burn's Cumberland ii., 201).

I suspect there has been some confusion between the two families (see Drummond's Brit. Families, "Nevill"), and that the match of Morevill was with the Cumberland house.

There was a family in Lincolnshire named from North or South Thoresby, who held the manor of Steynton in the Hole for a good many generations, and Blomefield (Hist. of Norfolk, viii., p. 420), thought the Thursby's of Gaywode in Norfolk were a branch, but they are given the arms of the Yorkshire Thoresby's in the Visitations, and in Burke's Landed Gentry, derived from John, a brother of George, with whom the old roll ends! Certainly the match with the daughter of Sir Thomas Grasse, of Suffolk, some generations earlier, might have sent a younger son into East Anglia.

(2) Alice or Avice, a daughter of Helias de Arncliffe, married one Adam de Thoresby, probably another wife (Burton's Mon. Ebor., 151). Harrison's Gilling West, p. 136, mentions an Alice, daughter of Wymer fil Roger de Thoresby, lord of Thoresby, and wife of Henry fitz Ranulph but I have found nothing to confirm this.

Sir Hugh de Thoresby, by Sibelle, daughter of Richard Oyselle, whose arms are given as argent, a saltire engrailed between four martlets sable, had Peter, parson of Ayscarth, and Hugh, who carried on the line.

Peter de Thoresby was evidently a worldly-minded cleric, and a man of great business capacity, a man who enjoyed life. In 1286-7, we find him, described as 'Peter fitz Hugh,' holding two carucates and six bovates in Thoresby of the heirs of William, son of Nicholas de Ebor¹, they of the heirs of Thornton-Stiward, they of the Honor of Richmond, a rather complicated tenure. 'Peter fitz Hugh de Thoresby' held eighteen bovates in Kerperby of Avicia Marmyon, she of the Earl. Peter 'de Thoresby' then also held five carucates and two bovates in Thornton Watlous of Robert de Tatersall, he of the same Honor.² He was Rector of Aysgarth. In 1289, he was temporal Chancellor of Durham and Constable of the Castle. In 1296, he had royal license to hunt at all times of the year, except in fence month, the hare, fox, and cat, with his own dogs, throughout the Chace of John de Britannia the elder, in 'Wensladale,' then in the King's hands, provided he take none of the King's great game, nor course in the King's Warren. This note is from Mr. W. Brown's excellent edition of the Lay Subsidy of a fifteenth of personalty levied in 1301.³ This Record shows us that 'Peter de Thoresby' largely farmed, not only his own estate, but much land in the neighbourhood, which he had leases of, for he is taxed for goods and chattels, besides Thoresby, at Carperby, and Thornton Watlous, Bellerby, Carlton-in-Coverdale, Spennithorne, Baynebrigg, and Halnaby. The other Thoresbys named therein being—a William at Carperby, an Adam at Burneston, and John at Reeth. In 1311, Peter was master of Kepier hospital (Canon Raine, Fasti Ebor., p. 451), and this is the last we hear of him. He was dead before 1316, for his brother,

(1) We learn from a memorandum on the last folio—pasted to the back cover—of the Reg. Honoris de Richmond, Cotton MS. Faust, B. vii., 72, that this William was son and heir of Nicholas de Ebor by Helen, daughter and heiress of William, son of Simon de Hebden, lord of Hebden, mentioned before. It should be noticed that on this same folio are rough contemporary drafts of pedigrees of de Mansfeld, Chevrolcourt and Gertheston, perhaps the very ones used in the compilation of the Thoresby Roll, and by the same hand. Bound up with this Reg. are some beautifully written Lists of Popes and Old Testament genealogies, with names or heads in roundels. The illustrated frontispiece to the Reg., representing the Conqueror giving the lands of Earl Edwyn to Count Alan (engraved by Clarkson), is a work of art, the heads of the King and Count being put in with a most masterly touch, which is quite unusual at that date. Another illumination (engraved by Gale) shows a later Earl of Richmond apparently reconciling two groups of his military tenants. Among those on the left we notice a knight with the Thoresby arms, and one on the right with those of Staveley. This suggests that the MS. was a copy of the Register made for one of the Thoresbys.

(2) Kirkby's Inquest, ed. R. Scaife, for Surtees Soc., pp. 151-154.

(3) York Record Series, vol. xxi., p. 89.

Hugh de Thoresby, who, it appears, in 1286-7, was holding of his two bovates, i.e. a mere husbandland in Thoresby (Kirkby's Inq.), was returned in 1316 as lord of Thoresby, and jointly with Simon de Stuteville, of Thornton Watlous (Nomina Villarum), but it must be remarked that as his son was also named Hugh this may refer to him. The pedigree marries him to Isabel, daughter of Sir Thomas de Grasse, of Suffolk, whose arms were azure, a fess embattled between three escallops.

We are now approaching a very interesting question. The paternity of John de Thoresby, Archbishop of York, "one of those great and good men who were the glory of the fourteenth century," as the late Chancellor Raine described him (Fasti Ebor. i., 449). This distinguished historian and antiquary it seems, with some doubts, accepted the testimony of the pedigree of "honest Ralph Thoresby" as he rightly styles him, and of his life of his eminent namesake, that the Archbishop was a son of the above-named Hugh and Isabel, and in "all probability" born at Thoresby. The Chancellor adds: "Far be it from me to question a genealogy of which a Herald of some note has said, 'In my opinion I never saw any descent so well travelled, nor so truly set down.' It would ill become me to differ from the decision of my compater (Mr. Surtees, the Historian of Durham), and the illustrious authorities by which he is supported." This gentle note of warning is amply justified, for though Hugh had a son John, nothing is added to bare his name in the old pedigree, and the silence is ominous, especially as another son, Thomas, is styled "Captain of Guynes." The Archbishop belonged to this generation, but the numerous relatives, cousins, or kinsmen, named by him in his Register and Will were:—

Robert de Thoresby, esq., who superintended works at (Bishop)thorpe, 1360-4; living 1373.

Richard de Thoresby, Canon of Beverley, 1355; Rector of Oundle, &c.

John de Thoresby, LLD., Canon of York, Prebendary of Ripon, after Provost of Beverley, one of the Archbishop's Exors., 1373.

Elias de Thoresby, Canon of York, 1361; Rector of Weston, whose Will is dated 16 Dec., 1391.

Galfrid de Thoresby, dec. 1373, left two daughters, Agnes and Margaret.

Besides these, Chancellor Raine mentions:—

John, son of Cecily de Thoresby, presented to the living of Aldwaldby, 1349.

William de Thoresby, Rector of a moiety of Cotgrave, who mentions in his Will, dated 1347, his brothers, John and Adam, the latter to have a horse at Thoresby (? Notts.); his sisters, Juliana and Isold; and John, son of Beatrix Thoresby.

Unfortunately not one of them have any place in the pedigree, and the children named of Hugh and Isabel are:—

- 1.—Maddy "Pucelle."
- 2.—John de Thoresby, succeeded in 1318–9.
- 3.—Hugh de Thoresby (who carried on the line).
- 4.—Piers de Thoresby.
- 5.—Thomas de Thoresby, Captain of Guynes.

One hardly likes to suggest that the hunting parson of Ayscarth had ever children of his own to set upon his knees, but such things did happen. A Hugh, son of Peter de Thoresby, occurs in 1312, when an action was brought against him concerning lands in Thornton-Watlous.

The Archbishop's seal has no shield of arms, but he is generally assigned those of this family. These are first described in that Roll of Arms of the time of Edward III., belonging in 1835 to Mr. Stacey Grimaldi, which is particularly interesting to Yorkshiremen from the number of Richmondshire coats it contains, among them this:—

raux rampantz de sable enarmez d'azure*

(Coll. Top. et Gen. II., p. 327).

It is uncertain whether this was Hugh the father or the son. To proceed with the pedigree, the latter had by Alice, daughter of Sir John Siggeston, who bore an eagle sable, a son, John de Thoresby, who married Margery, daughter of William Routh, of Holderness (arms, arg. a chevron between three lions' heads gules), and had three sons, Robert, Hugh, and William.

Hugh de Thoresby succeeded, and was the last of the male line to possess Thoresby, for by Maud, daughter of William Hertford, of Balderston and Badsworth (arms, arg. a lion rampant vert), he had two daughters and co-heirs. He occurs in 15 Ric. II. and 2 Hen. IV., but was dead in 1432, when there was a Suit in Hilary Term in the King's Bench between John Quyxley and Isabel his wife, and Richard Assheton and Agnes his wife, as to whether the estate of Hugh de Thoresby, late father of Isabel and Agnes, whose heirs they are, should be held in common or divided, viz.: the manors of Thornton-Watlous and Thoresby, with six messuages, four score acres of land, sixty-eight acres of meadow, and six acres of Wood, in Thornton Rust and Kerperby. It seems this resulted in a partition of the estate, for Agnes had Thornton-Watlous. She appears to have had two other husbands, viz.: Thomas Clervaux and Thomas Doddesworth, though the last is only named in the Old Roll, and therein she is given two sons, Raulf and James. From Ralph Dodsworth, our great and industrious antiquary, the real compiler of the Monasticon Anglicanum, Roger Dodsworth was descended, "the glory of his family," as Hunter wrote.¹

Isabel, the younger daughter and co-heir, had the manor of Thoresby. She was, as we have seen in 1432, the wife of John Quixley, whose arms are given in the old pedigree as gules, an orle arg. over all a bend ermine, and with their two sons, George "de Thoresby" and Miles "de Thoresby," the Old Roll abruptly ends. It was evidently drawn up either for George or his mother; to the former it gives an impaled coat Thoresby and arg. an eagle displayed azure (Barden), but with no lady's name, so apparently never completed. Isabel is given a previous husband in the antiquary's pedigree called Thomas, son of John de Thoresby, of "Branwheat," or elsewhere simply Thomas Branthwaite, who is made a cousin and the father of her son George, but the Old Roll is contemporary and better evidence, though the continuation of the surname favours this statement.

George Thoresby succeeded his mother at Thoresby, and got a third of Barden by marrying Agnes, daughter and heir of Matthew Ellerton and Katherine his wife, daughter and co-heir of John Barden, of Barden. He served on two juries at Richmond, Saturday after Michaelmas Day, 19 Hen. VI., 1440. By Agnes, he had

- 1.—Christopher, his heir.²
- 2.—John Thoresby, probably our antiquary's ancestor.
- 3.—Thomas Thoresby, of Barden, no doubt ancestor of those of Woolhouse. I find it stated in the Inq. p. m. of William Thurisby in 1528, that George Thoresby, Christopher's son, by will dated 11 Aug., 16 Hen. VIII., 1524, devised to his sons, Humphrey and Nicholas, lands in Sedberg, which his uncle(s), Thomas and John Thurisby, have for the term of their lives, so they were then living.

It is not necessary to our purpose to trace the descendants of Christopher, who died 20 Nov., 1491, leaving George, his son and heir, æt. 25, which gives us a useful date. The manor of Thoresby at this time held of the Lords Scroop, of Bolton Castle, hard by,

(1) See Hunter's Familie Minorum Gentium, p. 418, edited by Mr. Clay, for the Harl. Soc.

(2) It was found when Christopher Thoresby died, 20 Nov., 1491, that he held the manor and one carucate of land in Thoresby of George, Lord Fitzhugh, who held of the King as of the Honor of Richmond. Lord Fitzhugh was the representative Adam de Staveley.

descended to George's great grandson, Henry Thoresby, the last of the family, whose monument in Hackney Church is engraved in Dr. Whitaker's edition of The Ducatus. Why all the Thoresbys should quarter the Arms of Staveley I do not see. Eleanor Dame Hardress, the only child of Henry, had the manor which her descendant Thoresby Hardress passed, by fine Easter, 26 Geo. II., 1753, to Harry Waller, esq.

II. THORESBY, OF WOOLHOUSE.

A branch of the Thoresby family was certainly for several generations tenants of Woolhouse, "a single tenement," wrote Surtees in his history of Durham (IV., p. 94), scarcely half a mile from Barnard Castle, on the western brink of a deep ravine, shaggy with growth of native oak—through which a wild stream falls into the Tees, "but the evidence of wills would seem to imply that the Thoresbys were seated there, or were burgesses of Barnard Castle before the time assigned in pedigrees for the branching out from the main line." Surtees was quite correct, for the antiquary's pedigree and that in Sir William Dugdale's Visitation, co. York, 1666 (p. 249 Surtees Soc. Ed.), make Ralph a younger brother of the last Thoresby, of Thoresby, who died in 1615, ancestor of this branch which we find at Woolhouse three generations before!

Surtees then gives a note of the will of Cuthbert Thursbye, dated 21 Sept., 1574, who desired to be buried in the church of Barnard Castle "under my father's stone," and leaves to "Robert my son Thomas' son, the cuborde standing in the haule; to my son Thomas one Arke and one rowe of presses; to my daughter Mary all my shepe and £6 13s. 4d.; to my sons Thomas and Gabriel Thursby my lease of the demaynes. Proved 1574." On referring to the antiquary's printed pedigree, we find in all probability the Testator in Cuthbert, second son of Thomas Thoresby by Eleanor, daughter of John Burgh, and nephew of Christopher Thoresby, of Thoresby, esq., who also named a son Gabriel. Thomas and Eleanor had "four daughters." One of these must have been Margaret, wife of Arthur Banke, of Quixley, described in Glover's Visitation, p. 270, as "daughter of Thomas Thoresby, of Barden, a younger son," which would be quite correct. The antiquary's descent from this family is most improbable, and Ralph, of Woolhouse, made brother of Henry Thoresby, of Thoresby, is not named in the entail of Barden, 1581, and his ever having existed may be doubted, though made the antiquary's immediate ancestor!

III. THORESBY, OF WEST COTTINGWITH.

George Thoresby, of West Cottingwith, in the East Riding, the antiquary's great grandfather, is in the Visitation of 1666 made son of the above-named shadowy entity, Ralph, of Woolhouse, but what do we find? Only this, that there were Thoresbys at West Cottingwith some generations before! They had a farmhold there, which, as usual, was continued from father to son; but their descent from a younger son of Thoresby, of Thoresby, in another line need not be doubted, though it cannot yet be proved. The antiquary's own pedigree shows that George Thoresby, esq., of Thoresby, had by the heiress of Barden, besides Christopher, his heir, and Thomas, of Barden, father of Cuthbert, another son, John, who by Margaret Lumley is shown to have had Thomas and George. I suspect that this George Thoresby was the ancestor of the yeomen of East Cottingwith, as they kept up the name, but that is my only reason. In the next generation to this George, we have Richard Thurisbie, of West Cottingwith, in the parish of Thorganby, whose will, dated 25 Nov., 1558, was proved at York, 23 Nov., 1563 (vol. xvii., fol. 305). He names therein his sons George, Thomas, William, and Robert, and grandsons "little Will" and George. The last named in all probability the antiquary's great grandfather, but for the date of his birth, 1569. Some mistake might have been made in his age at death, or the grandchild George might have died young, and a younger brother given the same name.

I am indebted to Dr. Sykes, of Doncaster, a member of this Society, for notes of the following wills, the last of which is that of the antiquary's great grandfather:—

Will of RICHARD THURISBIE, of West Cottinwithe, parish of Thorganbie. Dated 25 November, 1558. [Reg. xvii., 305]. To be buried in Thorganbie p'ishe church as neare my wif as can be. Whatever may be the date of the antiquary's pedigree, it is a pleasure to state that he himself was in no way responsible for it. He was only seven years old when Sir William Dugdale recorded it at Leeds, 4 April, 1666. The fact seems to be that his branch knew they were related to the old stock, and to Cuthbert Thoresby, of Woolhouse, but the exact connection was left for some unscrupulous professional to show, and accepted in good faith as beyond the memory or knowledge of the living, which seldom extends unaided further back than a great grandfather. This is not the only Yorkshire pedigree approved by Dugdale in 1666 with less than his usual care and judgment. It is not absolutely proved that there was no Ralph, of Woolhouse, elder brother, according to the Visitation pedigree, of Cuthbert, of Woolhouse, apparently a great grandson of the elder Cuthbert before mentioned, but it is extremely unlikely. This second Cuthbert was himself of Woolhouse, and died 1635, leaving several sons. See his will in Surtees Durham. Ralph was not a Thoresby name, and our antiquary himself was clearly called so after his mother's father, Ralph Idle.

In conclusion, I submit there is a very fair chance of his descent being made out from the old stock on good evidence in the way indicated, but it will entail some deeper research than I have been able to make. I am sorry to have to leave his grand genealogy in this rather shattered condition.

Since the above was written, Mr. Brown has printed, in the Yorkshire Archæological Journal, Part 56, from the Stowe MSS. in the British Museum, with several letters of the Thoresbys of Leeds, one from Mr. Nathaniel Johnson to Mr. W. Dugdale, informing him that the family "desire a pedigree and scutcheon signed as I formerly intimated to you." The writer adds, "There is no doubt but that they are descended from 'Thoresby of Thoresby,' etc., p. 437.

In a letter from Mrs. Ellinor Mitford, of Burnhall, to Mr. George Thoresby, dated 1666, the Thoresbyes pedigree—possibly the Rotulus, from its antiquity and description—is referred to as having been lent by her son, Charles Barker, to Mr. George Thoresby; but it was evidently missing, though said to have been returned by George's brother John. Mrs. Mitford was a Thoresby, and formerly wife of Simon Peacock, of Burnhall (m. at Richmond, 8 Dec., 1622). In her will she mentions her brother Matthew Thursby's children, and ten pounds due to her from Thomas and Ralph Thursby. (Surtees Durham, iv., 99.)

The Rotulus, like the Nevill pedigree (see Gen. New S., iii., 31), the Grimaldi Roll of Arms, and the Registrum, of which there is another copy, "the Gilling MS.," at Castle Howard, probably came from the Scriptorium at Jervaulx Abbey. A note by Canon Raine (in the Gilling MS.) states that the internal evidence tends to show that the MS. was written there, from the great prominence given to all that relates to that Abbey. (Hist. MSS. Com. Report on the MSS. of the Earl of Carlisle, 1897.)

IN H. M. PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE.

LAY SUBSIDY $\frac{207}{200}$,

Wapentake of Skyrack,

30 June and 20 October, 1543.

THE following list of persons in the Wapentake of Skyrack, assessed to the payment of the subsidy granted in the thirty-fourth year of King Henry VIII., is copied from the original, preserved in the Public Record Office.¹ There are in the same Office many documents relating to such subsidies, from a period long anterior to the year in question, which are calendered, county by county, in the manuscript "descriptive slips" placed in the round room; but full lists of the persons assessed, such as the following, are comparatively rare,—very rare before the time of Henry VIII. Such a list for Skyrack exists for 1525, and it has been printed in the Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, Vol. II., pp. 43 and 289. The list here given is, so far as is at present known, the next one still remaining to us.

The preamble to the Act granting the subsidy recites that it had been made plain to Parliament by the examination of "soondrye olde auncient and autentique rolles, patents, wrytings, and recordes, openlye and manifestlye exhibited and maturelye redde and debated in this present Parliament," that Henry VIII. had a good and just title to the crown and realm of Scotland, and that although the assertion of that title had been suspended by the king and his predecessors, yet his rights remained unimpaired: and that the late "pretensed" King of Scotland (i.e. James V.), and his subjects had inflicted great wrongs upon the English dwelling on the marches, in spite of Henry's frequent remonstrances, whereby the king was constrained to use his forces against the Scotch, and consequently to raise great armies and increase his garrisons, at a heavy cost. The preamble goes on to state that the recent death of James had afforded a suitable opening for assertion of the king's rights to the Scottish crown, and to aid in this and in payment of the expenses already incurred, it had been agreed to grant him one entire subsidy, to be levied as follows:—

On the personal estate of subjects worth £1 to £5, fourpence in the pound; £5 to £10, eightpence in the pound; £10 to £20, sixteen pence in the pound; above £20, two shillings in the pound. Payment was to be made by three yearly instalments,—the first three classes paying half the assessment the first year, and a quarter in each of the succeeding two years; the remaining class one-third in each year.

On the real estate of subjects, where the annual value was £1 to £5, eightpence in the pound; £5 to £10, sixteen pence in the pound; £10 to £20, two shillings in the pound; above £20, three shillings in the pound. Payment to be spread over three years, as before,—the first two classes paying half the assessment the first year, and a quarter in each of the succeeding years; the remainder paying a third in each year.

The present return relates to the third or final instalment.

The loose and extravagant system of finance current under the government of Henry VIII. is exemplified by the record of the direct taxation imposed. The new revenues accruing to the crown from the dissolution of the religious houses in 1539 and 1540 were so immense, that the people naturally expected a very light for a long time. But heavy sums were required, from Parliament in 1540, 1541, and 1542. When the king died in 1547, he left a load of financial straits of the government are here printed (p. 150), which is really a list, though it refers to the same instalment necessary to raise a large sum by calling on the subjects to pay this instalment in advance, and names of such persons for the wapentake of Sevrack. An Act cancelling his liability to allow for such a payment in advance, and then the unlucky contributors still responsible for the amount already paid.

The genealogical value of the return is of course considerable. In the whole wapentake of Skyrack there are probably not more than two or three parish registers dating back to this period, still remaining to us: so that in very many cases the mention of an inhabitant in the subsidy rolls must be the only surviving record of his existence. But the chief practical value of the rolls lies in the statistical information they furnish,—information which is of great importance in elucidating the contemporary history and the progress of the districts to which they relate. It is proposed to print in future parts of the Miscellanea other assessment lists still extant for the wapentake of Skyrack in the sixteenth century; and when this has been done, it will be possible to found upon them an article which should undoubtedly throw much new light upon our local history.

A word may be added as to the movements consequent on the dissolution following the recent dissolution of the abbey, as illustrated by this return. In some of the townships of the wapentake nearly every inhabitant had been a tenant of the house of Kirkstall; and if we compare the lists of tenants at the dissolution with the names here printed, we find some curious variations in the different vill. Thus in Bardsey, of eleven persons formerly holding of the Abbey, only one figures in the subsidy roll; whereas in the adjacent vill of Collingham, of fourteen persons late tenants of the Abbey, eleven still remain, the remaining three being cottagers not likely to be assessed. At Adel and Eccup, nearly all the old tenants, or their families, are still represented; but at Gledhow only two out of six remain. From the year 1543 we find that purchases of the lands of the Abbey from the king occur pretty frequently, and change of ownership may have now commenced to bring about considerable changes in the tenantry.

The copy has been made from the original Roll by Mr. C. E. Gildersome-Dickinson.

(1) Margaret Gygge was married to Robert Brigg, at Methley, 11th November, 1567. In 1524 Richard Gygge was taxed 12d. for 20s. lands at Methley. Robert Gygge, of Methley, probably son of the latter, was buried there 5th February, 1563-4. Thomas Gygge was buried at Methley, 19th April, 1562, and Agnes, his widow, 31st January, 1564-5; he was probably a brother of Robert. Isabel Gygge married William Smyth, at Methley, 29th July, 1571. Robert Gygge was twice married, first to a daughter of Robert Labron, of Methley, by whom he probably had four children: Robert Gygge (buried 21st June, 1562), Alice Gygge, Anne Gygge, and Janet Gygge. By his second wife, Agnes, daughter of Robert Ward, of Methley, and widow of John Pearson, he had: Anne Gygge, baptized 13th September, 1560, and Janet Gygge, baptized 19th November, 1562, at Methley. Alice Gygge married Robert Shillito, 21st January, 1570-71, at Methley. Anne Gygge, married 17th September, 1560, Michael Scarre. Janet Gygge, married 5th August, 1577, Robert Nalson, of Methley, and was buried there 4th May, 1604. There are no further traces of the Gygge family in the Methley Registers of later date. There is the following curious entry in the Methley Registers respecting the death of Robert Nalson: "1599. November. Mariorye, the wife of Willia^m Hagger, buried the xxviijth day thereof. Rob't Nalsonn was buried the same day; the said Roberte did breake his faste the same day and was in good healthe, and came to the church to ye buryinge of the foresaid Mariorye, and did helpe to ringe a peale at ye bells, and within one halfe houre after died, in the p'sence of all the people in ye church, and was buried within foure houres afterwards."

Two Old Plans of Leeds.

THAT any description is rendered more interesting and intelligible by illustrations will be readily admitted; but it is impossible, or nearly so, to describe a place without the assistance of a map; and those who wish to know what Leeds was like one, two or three centuries ago, can best obtain the information they require by studying such old maps of the town as still exist. •

The earliest known map of Leeds is one recently found in the Public Record Office, which was prepared in the middle of the sixteenth century: a facsimile of this, on a reduced scale, faces page 2, in the present volume of the Society's publications. Though it is a rude sketch, without any attempt at accuracy of detail, it is well worthy of careful examination; and it will not escape observation that it is drawn with the east at the top, a practice which was adopted in early times, and is supposed to have had a religious origin. The object of this Paper is to describe two Plans of the town as it existed in the eighteenth century, reduced facsimile copies of which are now presented to the members.

Every one is aware that Leeds is a place which has grown very rapidly in recent years, and some know that the population, which is now over 400,000, was 62,534 in 1801, the year in which the first decennial census was taken; but it is much easier to realise what the growth has been when one compares a map of the town as it is with one made a century and a half ago.

The Plans in question were both drawn in the last century, but one of them bears no date. This one is in the Philosophical Hall; and the members of the Thoresby Society are indebted to the Council of the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society for permission to publish a photograph of it. The map itself has suffered so much from age, and is so discoloured, that it was found impracticable to obtain a satisfactory copy by photographing direct from the original. Fortunately, it has been possible to overcome this difficulty. Mr. Albert E. Kirk, A.R.I.B.A., a member of the Society, has been good enough to make a copy from the original, and this has been reduced by photography. A very casual glance at this will satisfy the members of the obligation under which Mr. Kirk has placed them, and of the great labour which he has bestowed upon the work.

As there is no date on the map, the first thing I have done has been to endeavour to supply this want. I am inclined to put the date at about 1725; and, as Thoresby's Ducatus was published in 1715, I think the map in question may be considered as showing what Leeds was like in his lifetime. There are three coats of arms on it. One of these is the arms of Leeds; and as these are represented without the chief, which was adopted in 1661, out of compliment to the first mayor (Thomas Danby, Esq.) under the second charter, it might be supposed to afford evidence that the map was older than it really is. I have no hesitation in disregarding this evidence, especially when I find that Trinity Church is shown on it, the first stone of which was laid on the 23rd August, 1721. In the short description of the town given in the right-hand bottom corner, it is stated that "Leedes gives the title of Duke to Peregrine Osburn, whose father was raised to that dignity by the late King William." If this is correct, the map was drawn during the life of Peregrine Osborne, after he became Duke of Leeds, in 1712; he died in 1729, therefore, I put the date between 1721, when Trinity Church was commenced, and 1729, when the second Duke of Leeds died.

The map is stated to have been drawn from a survey by John Cossins. It is evidently not the result of what is now understood as a survey, and must be taken to be only approximately accurate. It may fairly be assumed that all the roads shown on this map existed when it was made, and possibly that no other road of importance was then in existence.

Leeds Bridge is shown, though with a larger number of arches than the old bridge had. The old bridge was removed to make way for the present structure, which was opened on the 9th July, 1873. It was really three bridges side by side. The one shown on the map is, probably, the middle one of these three, which was wide enough for foot and horse traffic only. In 1730 its width was doubled by the construction of another bridge on the upper side, and in 1760 a similar widening took place on the opposite side.

The roads shown on the south side of the river are only—Meadow Lane, which becomes the "R^d to Halifax"; Hunslet Lane, which is continued as the "London R^d"; Simpson's Fold (now Dock Street), and Bowman Lane. The inaccuracy of the map is shown by the position given to Hunslet Lane, which turns west at its junction with Bowman Lane, whereas, in reality, Hunslet Lane, after proceeding pretty nearly due south for some distance, turns east. One would almost be inclined to say that what is called Meadow Lane was really Water Lane, and that the London road shows the position of Meadow Lane.

The Quakers' Meeting House, between Meadow Lane and the river, is shown, with its burial place; while, in Simpson's Fold, is the mansion of William Milner, Esquire, occupying the site of the Aire and Calder basin and warehouses. Mr. Milner was one of the original promoters of the Aire and Calder Navigation in 1699.

North of Leeds bridge we find Briggate, fairly accurately represented, and bearing the following names:—"Cloth Market," below Boar Lane; "Market Place," above Boar Lane; "Briggate," south of Kirkgate end; the Moot Hall stands in the middle, north of Kirkgate, with the "Shambles," on the east side of the street, north of the Moot Hall. The Middle Row, dividing this part of the street into "Shambles" and "Back o'the Shambles," is not shown. North of this is the Market Cross, and the "Upper Head Row" and "Lower Head Row" are also shown, with the new street which was afterwards called St. John Street, and occupies a part of the site of the present New Briggate.

West of Briggate we find the "Low and Upper Tenters," "Swine Gate," "Mill Hill," "Boar Lane" and "Cripplegate." Trinity Church on the north side of Boar Lane, and the old Mill Hill Chapel and School are shown.

Where Basinghall Street now is was a lane called "Mill Hill Lane." Commercial Street did not exist. "Land's Lane" is shown, though the name is given to a crooked passage from what we now know as Land's Lane into Briggate, opposite the Moot Hall.

It seems that the frontages to the north side of Boar Lane, the west side of Briggate, and the south side of Upper Head Row, were closely built upon; but in the middle was vacant ground described as "Mr. Shaw Croft," "Alderⁿ Brearey Croft," "Mr. Oagle," "Alderⁿ Brearey," "Mr. Sleigh garden," "Mr. Calverley's bowling green."

At the north end of Mill Hill Lane Burley Bar is shown, the street west of this being called "Parke Lane." The "road to Woodhouse," with Harrison's Hospital near its east side, has a gate across its south end.

On the east side of Briggate we have the "Calls," "Call Lane," and a street near Duncan Street, called "Currie Entry"; "Kirkgate" terminating at York Bar, near the Parish Church; beyond which we have "Timble Bridge" and "March Lane," leading to "York Road." "Vicar Lane" is shown, leading from Kirkgate to the bottom of "Lower Head Row," "Lady Lane," and the beginning of North Street, called "Town's End." The "Vicar's Croft" was unbuilt upon, and the Vicarage was then standing in it. Between the Vicar's Croft and Lady Lane there were buildings fronting to Vicar Lane, as there were buildings fronting to Kirkgate between Vicar's Croft and the present Parish Church new Burial Ground. The rest was open ground up to Sheepscar Beck, and was called "Mill Garth" and "Leylands."

The following buildings are shown: to the south of the river:—Mr. Milner's mansion and the Quakers' Meeting House, already mentioned. North of the river:—"the Manor House," afterwards known as Scarborough's Hotel, or a building on that site; Mill Hill Chapel, called "Prestⁿ Meeting," "Trinity Church," "Red Hall," "St. John's Church," a large house to the east of St. John's Church, probably "St. John's Vicarage;" "the Free School," the mansions of Mr. Thomas Dennison, and Mr. Robert Dennison, the Vicarage, Alderman Barstow's, Call Lane Chapel, the White Cloth Hall, Alderman Cookson's mansion, the Parish Church, and Alderman Atkinson's mansion in Call Lane.

The Moot Hall has been already mentioned, and we find on the south side of Kirkgate, at its west end, "the White Swan" and "the New Prison."

One of the most interesting features of this old map is a series of sketches, eight on each side, of the principal buildings in the town at the date when the map was prepared. The following is a list of them:—

1	Mr. Hugh Sleigh,	Briggate.
2	James Ibbetson, Esq.,	Kirkgate.
3	Mr. Dixon,	Merchant, Call Lane.
4	Mr. Tho. Sawer,	Boar Lane.
5	Mr. Jacob Busk,	Merchant, Meadow Lane.
6	Mr. Douglas,	Merchant, Meadow Lane.
7	Mr. Croft Preston,	Merchant, Town's End.
8	Alderman Brearey,	Boar Lane.
9	The Town Hall.
10	Mr. Robert Dennison,	Merchant, Town's End.
11	Mr. Tho. Dennison,	Merchant, Town's End.
12	Mr. Tho. Lee,	Merchant.
13	Mr. Bischooff,	Merchant, Kirkgate.
14	Mr. Birkenhold,	Merchant, Kirkgate.
15	Alderman Rooke,	Boar Lane.
16	Mr. Markham,	Hunslet Lane.

The numbers in some cases refer to corresponding numbers on the Plan, but a careful examination has failed to show the position of several of the buildings.

Mr. Sleigh's house (No. 1) is on the east side of Briggate, south of Kirkgate, where Beckett's Bank used to be. Mr. Ibbetson's house (No. 2) was on the south side of Kirkgate,—opposite the end of Vicar Lane,—the exterior has been remodelled, but within some of the old rooms remain. The premises are now occupied by Messrs. Tiffany, Brushmakers. Mr. Dixon's house (No. 3) was on the east side of Call Lane, near the Calls. All the buildings on this side of Call Lane have been recently rebuilt. Mr. Tho. Sawyer's house was on the north side of Boar Lane, near Cripplegate,—which is now called "Upper Mill Hill,"—the building no longer exists. The position of Mr. Jacob Busk's house in Meadow Lane is not shown on the map. It may have been what is now the Union Tavern, nearly opposite Victoria Road. Mr. Douglas's house in Meadow Lane still stands between that Lane and Victoria Road. It is called Austhorpe Hall—its garden is still unbuilt upon, and is approached under an archway in New Lane. The name of Douglas, of Austhorpe Hall, appears very frequently in the Leeds Parish Church registers. The position of Mr. Croft Preston's house at Town's End is not shown on the Map. Alderman Brearey's house (No. 8) was on the north side of Boar Lane, west of Trinity Church,—it no longer exists. No. 9 is called the Town Hall. It was originally called the "Moot Hall," and stood at the head of what was then called Briggate, a little north of Kirkgate end.

About 1823, the Middle Row, which divided what is now the upper part of Briggate into two narrow alleys, called Shambles and Back o' the Shambles, was removed, and the Moot Hall was re-erected at the new Head of Briggate, between Upper and Lower Head Row. There it stood, with a marble statue of Queen Anne in a niche in front, until the making of New Briggate, when it was removed. Queen Anne's statue is now in the Art Gallery. Mr. Robert Dennison's house (No. 10) was afterwards the residence of Mr. William Sheepshanks, and is now incorporated in the furniture warehouse of Ebenezer Miller, Limited. Mr. Tho. Dennison's house (No. 11) was on the west side of North Street, and may now be found at the junction of New Briggate and that Street. Mr. Tho. Lee's mansion (No. 12) is on the west side of Briggate, is now numbered 16, and is a restaurant. Mr. Bischoff's house (No. 13) stood on the north side of Kirkgate, and no longer exists. It is said that Mr. Birkenhold also lived in Kirkgate, but his mansion cannot now be identified. Alderman Rooke's mansion in Boar Lane has also disappeared, and the situation of Mr. Markham's house in Hunslet Lane is not indicated on the map.

It is noticeable that while the Town Hall or Moot Hall is one of the buildings, of which a sketch is given, none of the three churches is included in the list, nor is the Vicarage, nor St. John's parsonage. The reason, however, may be that these buildings are shown on the map itself, where an elevation, instead of a ground plan, indicates the situation of each. This remark applies also to Mill Hill Chapel and some other buildings of a private character.

Though it is believed that the map in the Philosophical Hall is unique, it should be stated that in a copy of Whitaker's History of Leeds, which formerly belonged to Mr. William Boyne, the antiquary, there is what is apparently a copy of the map, without the sketches at the side, which appears to have been engraved by Pulleyne & Hunt, lithographers, Leeds. Mr. Boyne has written the following note on this copy:—"A reduced copy of an engraved plan of Leeds without date (circa 1780). At the sides of the original were views of houses as marked in the margin. Mr. H. Sharp has the original. The White Cloth Hall, which appears on the plan, was built in 1774." Then follows the list of the sixteen houses given above.

The date given by Mr. Boyne is misleading, and it is curious that so good an antiquary should have made a mistake which might have been so easily avoided. Whatever the date of the map may be, it is clear that it was drawn at a time when the Cloth Market was held in the lower part of Briggate, as described by Thoresby. It is true that on the south side of Kirkgate a small building called "White Cloth Hall" is shown on the map. Mr. Boyne has assumed that this was the White Cloth Hall, built, as he says, in 1774. This Hall still exists, though the North Eastern Railway runs across it, and it is no longer used for its original purpose. It is a building of great size, having 200 feet frontage to the Calls. When the map in question was made the site of this Cloth Hall was vacant land. The White Cloth Hall shown on the map was much nearer Kirkgate, and was probably a building temporarily used before the larger one was erected.

The copy of Whitaker's History above referred to was purchased by Mr. Richard Wilson at the recent sale of Mr. John Stansfeld's Library, and we are indebted to Mr. Wilson for information respecting it:—

In addition to the buildings of which sketches are given on each side of the map, others are shown and referred to by letters of the alphabet, from A to S.

The following is a list of them :—

- A Queen Anne Statue, in marble.
- B The Town Hall.
- C The New Prison.
- D The Back Way to ye White Swan.
- E The Vicarage House and Garden.
- F Aldermⁿ Barstow House and Gardens.
- G Mr. Atkinson's House and Garden.
- H Mr. Cookson, Aldermⁿ, his House and Gardens.
- I Lawyer Wilson House and Garden.
- K Wm. Milner, Esq., House and Gardens.
- L Mr. Berkenhold, Merch^t.
- M Mr. Bischooff, Merchant.
- N Rd. to Quarry Hill and Map Gate.
- O The Talbutt Inn, Mr. Hopkinson's.
- P Mr. Nathl. English House and Garden.
- Q Leedes Bridge.
- R Mr. George Green House and Warehouse.
- S The White Swan, Mr. Fran. Milner's.

The second map, to which reference has been made, bears the names of Robert Sayer and John Bennett, of London, as publishers, and is said to be from a Survey made from 1767 to 1770. The Thoresby Society possesses a portion of Jeffery's map of Yorkshire, 1771, in the corner of which this plan is engraved. The plan of the town was republished by Mr. Dodgson in 1878. It shows a place little, if any, larger than that shown in the older map, and though not drawn to scale it is more accurate than its predecessor.

The area represented extends from the Old Infirmary, at the bottom of East Parade, to the bottom of York Road on the east, and from near the site of Hunslet Lane Station on the south, to Potter's Almshouses on the north. The streets shown are those which appear on the older map, with some variations; and, wherever the maps differ, the later one is the more accurate. On the south side of the river Water Lane is shown, though not named. Meadow Lane and Hunslet Lane are shown with fair accuracy, and Simpson's Fold and Bowman Lane are marked. On the east side of Meadow Lane is a long building called White Hall. Further to the west we find Water Hall and the Buckrum House, and the stream called Hol Beck is shown, falling into the river Aire at a place called Teal Bridge, near the junction of Meadow Lane and Water Lane. Between Swinegate and the river we find the King's Mills, and other buildings in Upper and Low Tenters, but the rest of School Close was unbuilt upon.

The White Horse was standing on the south side of Boar Lane, and west of Mill Hill Chapel, then called Presbyterian Meeting, the position of the Old Coloured Cloth Hall is shown, and near it the Old Infirmary. There were buildings on the west side of Briggate, from Swinegate to Upper Head Row. Swan Street is shown but not named, and from the bottom of Land's Lane to Briggate there was an irregular passage called Slipin Yard. West of Land's Lane there were no buildings, except Red Hall and a few detached ones in Guildford Street. Wade Lane is fairly accurately shown, as is the bottom of Woodhouse Lane, then called Lidgate, leading to the road from Kendal.

The Grammar School is shown, north of which there were a few detached buildings only, on either side of the "road to Harrow-gate." Lady Lane and Quarry Hill are shown, but few buildings in them, and there were few buildings in March Lane, leading from Timble Bridge to the bottom of York Road. There was a road or footpath where Duke Street and St. Peter's Street now are, and St. Peter's Chapel was then called Methodist Meeting. The Vicarage was then standing where the Glass Market now is, and from the east of the Vicar's Croft there were blocks of buildings in Kirkgate, nearly extending to the Parish Church. The rest of the land on the west side of Sheepscar Beck was unbuilt upon, with the exception of a small cluster of buildings, which may indicate the site of Thomas Falkingham's mill, which gave rise to a law suit in the sixteenth century (see pages 1-4). The oldest part of Leeds is no doubt that between Kirkgate, Briggate and the river. The portion of the main street below Boar Lane is called Briggate; between Boar Lane and Kirkgate end it is called Market Place; above Kirkgate it is divided into Shambles, and Back o' the Shambles by the Town Hall and Middle Row, above which is another Market Place, and the Cross is named, though its exact position is not shown.

Three inns only are named. The White Horse, in Boar Lane, has already been mentioned. It was pulled down when the street was widened. The other two inns were on the east side of Briggate, but their names are not now to be found. Half way between where Duncan Street now is and the Calls there was an inn called the New Inn, which may be what we now know as the Royal Hotel, or the Bull and Mouth ; and further north was the King's Arms, near which was Call Lane Chapel, which was then called Independent Meeting. The site of the old White Cloth Hall was then a tenter-garth, and between that garth and Kirkgate was a building called "Assembly Rooms," probably the same building as that which was called White Cloth Hall on the older map. On the east side of the Bridge, between the Calls and the river, the words "Water Engine" on the map remind us of the fact that the people of Leeds then drank the water of the river, which was pumped up at this place. East of this was the Town Warehouse, and the Calls was then a narrow street leading to the Parish Church. There was then no thoroughfare between the church and the river.

My main object has been to present to the members copies of the two plans above described. They are both worthy of preservation. Of the first plan one complete copy only is known to exist. Of the second it is improbable that there are many copies of the original. Both, it is hoped, will now be preserved for all time.

I have endeavoured to describe the plans, but there may be many points known to some of the members, though unknown to me ; and it is, of course, possible that errors may have inadvertently crept in. I trust that any member who reads this paper, and who can amplify or correct what I have written, will not hesitate to do so. I am sure the Editor of the Miscellanea will be glad to insert any additions or corrections in some future number.

LEEDS

“The Insignia include a great mace, two mayoral chains, and the common and other seals.

“Both the charter of 1626 and that of 1661 empower the election of two sergeants-at-mace, who may carry gilt or silver maces with the royal arms.

“The present mace is of silver-gilt, and measures 4 feet 8 inches in length. It is of the usual late type, with crowned head encircled by the royal badges, each between the initials of William and Mary, and surmounted by the orb and cross. The shaft is divided by flattened knots adorned with acanthus leaves, into one long and two short sections, which are chased throughout with spirals of flowers. Just below the head are four slender brackets. On the foot-knop are engraved the borough arms, and above them ‘BURGUS DE LEEDS.’ Also, ‘THO. DIKSON MAIOR’ and ‘MARMEDUKE HICK 2 MAIOR.’¹ On the opposite side to the borough arms are the letters ‘G BRIT.’ Round the edge is also the name of the maker: ‘Arthur Mangey de Leeds fecit 1694,’² to whom the treasurer was ordered on November 3rd, 1694, to pay the sum of £60 11s. for making the mace.³

“On January 24th, 1713, the following curious order was made touching the mace:—

‘Agreed and Ordered that the Inscriptcon put upon the Bottom of the great Mace belonging to this Corporacon, by the direction of Mr. Alderman Barstow,⁴ when Maior, shall be oblitterated and defaced soe as to be made Illegable. And that for the future noe

¹ Thomas Dixon was mayor in 1671-2, and again in 1693-4. Marmaduke Hick was alderman in 1656, and mayor in 1666-7, 1681-2, and 1694-5.

² Mangey was tried and convicted two years later for clipping and forging the current coin of the realm, and was hanged at York for the offence on October 3rd (should be October 2nd), 1696.

"On the 8th of March, 1728, it was ordered that the mace supplied to the Corporation by Mr. Arthur Monjoy should be re-gilded, and the old silver mace sold to defray the expenses thereof. The work was performed by Mr. Isaac Hancock, whose bill amounted to £15 13s. 5d., and the old mace was ordered to be sold to him at the rate of five shillings per ounce. Another coat of gold was given to this Badge of Office in 1771, in addition to which it has recently undergone a complete repair."²

Of the old silver mace sold in 1728 nothing is known.

CLIPPING INSTRUMENTS

at present in the Museum of the Philosophical Society, Park Row, Leeds.

These shears are supposed to be those used by Arthur Mangey for clipping coins. They were found in 1832 in the false roof of a house in Briggate, the property of Mr. Liddle. See Leeds Mercury, June 9th, 1832.

Trial at York for Counterfeiting¹

Of Mr. ARTHUR MANGY, of Leeds, Aug. 1st, 1696.

Transcribed from a MS. Book presented to the Society by Mr. ALDERSON-SMITH, and annotated by Mr. CHAS. MILNER ATKINSON, M.A.

The Arraignment Tryall and Condemnation of Arthur Mangy of Leeds in the County of York goldsmith for Counterfeiting the Currant Coine of this Realme (who upon full evidence) was found guilty of the said high Treason before my Lord Chief Baron Turton on Saturday the first Day of August 1696 and received sentence the same night and accordingly was executed at the common place of execution on Friday the second day of October following.

Die Sabati primo Augusti Anno Regni Regis Willielmi Tertii Octavo Annoque Domini 1696.

The Court being sat proceeded in this manner—

CLERK OF ARRAIGNMENT.—Cryer make proclamation.

CRYER.—All manner of persons² that have anything more to do att this generall Assise of Nisi prius Oyer and Terminer and generall goal delivery, draw near and give your Attendance.

CLE: OF ARR:—Sett Mr. Arthur Mangy to the Barr (which was done).

¹ See Old Yorkshire, 1st series, vol. iii., p. 200, for an article by Jewitt, and see Wardell's Municipal History of Leeds, pp. 63 and 64.

² CRYER.—“All manner of persons,” &c. This and the next proclamation “Oyez! Oyez! Oyez!” etc.: are still to be heard daily at the Assizes in almost identical terms. “Nisi prius,” referring to the commission to justices of assize in connection with civil matters, so called from a writ commanding the jury to appear at Westminster on a certain day of the following term, “Nisi prius justiciarii domini regis ad assisas capiend: venerint.” This they were sure to do during the vacation. “Oyer and Terminer,” referring to the commission directed to the judges, &c., by virtue whereof they may “hear and determine” treasons, felonies and trespasses. The judges at assizes sit by virtue of five several authorities, i.e. the Commissions of Assize (originally relating only to ejectments), Oyer and Terminer, Nisi Prius, General Gaol Delivery and as Justices of the Peace. The Queen's Counsel are still included in the commission of Oyer and Terminer.

³ CLE: OF ARR.—“Hold up thy hand,” &c. Formerly the accused was not allowed to plead until he had held up his hand which was in the nature of an

County of York by the name of Arthur Mangy late of the town of Leeds goldsmith for that thou the fear of God in thy heart not having nor weighing the duty of Allegiance to the King, but being instigated by the Devill treasonably, traiterously, and against the known laws of this Realme, our Sovereigne Lord the King his crowne and dignity, didst coyn twenty pieces of money¹ of mixt mettall in imitation of the currant coyn of this Realme commonly cald Shilling. How sayst thou Arthur Mangy art thou guilty of this high treason whereof thou stands Indicted or not guilty.

MANGY.—Not guilty.

CL: OF ARR.—How wilt thou be try'd?²

MANGY.—By God and the Country.³

CL: OF ARR.—God send thee a good Delivery.⁴ Cryer make proclamation.

CRYER.—Oyez, Oyez, Oyez. All manner of persons that can inform his Majesties Justices of Nisi prius, Oyer and Terminer and generall goal Delivery, the Kings Councill, the Kings Attorney, or the Kings Sollicitor of any Treasons, Felonies Misdemeanors or breach of pease against Arthur Mangy prisoner att the Barr let them come forth and they shall be heard for now the prisoner stands upon his delivery.

CL: OF ARR:—Call the Jury. You the prisoner att the Barr those good men that you shall hear call'd and personally appear are to pass betwixt our Sovereigne Lord the King and you upon appearance. "Being instigated by the Devill crowne and dignity." Similar injurious references to the devil were always to be found in indictments within the memory of many men still living.

Cf.:—"All in breach of the peace—moved by Satan's malignity,

"And in spite of King James and his crown and his dignity."

Ingoldsby Legends, "Witches' Frolic."

² CL: OF ARR.—"How wilt thou be try'd?" This question was in ancient times very material, as the accused might be tried in one of three several ways, viz. by "jury," by "wager of battel," or by "ordeal." It had, however, lost much of its significance at the end of the 17th century, as the two latter modes of trial were rapidly becoming obsolete.

³ MANGY.—"By God and the Country." i.e. by jury. When a prisoner pleads not guilty at the present day the Clerk of the Peace still marks the indictment "Puts," i.e. "puts himself upon his country." If the accused elected to be tried "by God only" he was exposed to trial by "ordeal" (the water ordeal apparently for bondsmen and rustics, the ordeal by fire for those of better condition).

tryall of your Life and death if therefore you will challenge them¹ or any of them your time is to challenge them as they come to the book to be sworne.

Then the Jury was sworne and the Prisoner challenged some Leeds men, at last those whose names are as follows were sworne:—

Henry Bouch Esquire	Tho: Dickings Gent:
Rob ^t Metford Esquire	James Stansfield Gent:
Tho: Ramsden Esquire	Micha ^l Wilson Gent:
Arthur Farrar Esquire	Giles Dolliff Gent:
John Milner Esquire	W ^m Rousby Gent:
Tho: Grimstone Esquire	John Wood Gent:

CLE: OF AR.—Arthur Mangy hold up thy hand, which he did. You gentlemen of the Jury looke upon the prisoner and hearken to his cause. He stands indicted in the county of York by the name² of Arthur Mangy aforesaid, in the Indictment and against the forme of the statutes in that case made and provided upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned and thereunto hath pleaded not guilty and for his tryall hath put himselfe upon God and his Country, which country you are, you are to enquire whether he be guilty of the high treason whereof he stands indicted (in manner and form as he stands indicted) or not guilty, if you find him guilty you are to enquire what goods and chattels, Lands and tenements he was possessed of att the time when the high treason was committed or att any time since, if you find him not guilty you are to enquire whether he fled for it, if you find he fled for it you are to enquire of his goods and chattels as if you had found him guilty, if that you find him not guilty nor that he fled for it you are to say so and no more and hearken to y^e evidence.

¹ CL. OF ARR.—“You will challenge them,” &c. The privilege of peremptory challenge was allowed in all capital cases. The right still exists. At the time of the trial of Mangy the accused might challenge twenty of those summoned on the jury panel without assigning any reason for his objection. Mangy apparently challenged some Leeds men on the ground of local prejudice.

² CL: OF ARR.—“Arthur Mangy hold up thy hand,” which he did. “You gentlemen of the Jury looke upon the prisoner and hearken to his cause. He stands indicted in the county of York by the name,” &c. In this address the Clerk of Arraigns acquaints the jury with the nature of the charge preferred, and the issue which they are called upon to determine. A very similar form of words is still in use, although the direction to enquire as to the lands and chattels of the prisoner (in the event of a conviction) is no longer given. This enquiry was formerly necessary for the determination of questions relating to the forfeiture of the criminal's property.

COUNCILL FOR } My Lord, and gentlemen¹ of the Jury here is a
 THE KING. } person Indicted for stamping or counterfeiting the Kings Coyne which any man knows to be high Treason, if my Lord we prove the fact upon him and that he did actually do the same we need say no more. Cryer call Geo: Norcross (Norcross was sworn).

MANGY.—My Lord, I desire the Evidence² may not have the liberty to have any person to stand by him to dictate to him what he should speak.

JUDGE TURTON.—He shall not.

K^s COUNCIL.—Come Geo: Norcross pray acquaint my Lord and gentlemen of the Jury with all the particular concerns you have had with M^r Mangy.

NORCROSS.—If it please your Lordship I was going one day through
 M^r Wainmans Court and in one of the Rooms as I past by sat
 M^r Mangy and one Mortimer another goldsmith. M^r Mangy call'd of me and desired me to come and take a Glass with him and told me I should be very welcome, so I went into their company and when we had drunk a glass or two Mortimer left us, so nobody being near he told me he wanted a servant and

¹ COUNCILL FOR THE KING.—“My Lord, and gentlemen,” &c. This “opening” of the case is of commendable brevity, though it can hardly have served to enlighten the minds of the Court or Jury. The duties of the prosecuting counsel seem (according to modern notions) to have been throughout discharged in the most perfunctory fashion. It will be observed that he does not “examine” the witness at all. “Come, George Norcross, pray acquaint my Lord and gentlemen of the Jury with all the particular concerns you have had with M^r Mangy.” This method of “giving the witness his head” would not nowadays be tolerated in the most trifling or ill-conducted case. The rules of evidence which now prevail had not come into existence at the date of Mangy’s trial, they are for the most part judge-made and have been of very gradual growth; indeed, more than a hundred years after the trial of Mangy these rules were not indetical on the different circuits. The exclusion of “hearsay,” which we regard as an inveterate rule, would have operated to reduce very largely the dimensions of the testimony given against Mangy. Moreover, quite apart from any considerations based upon technical requirements or the principles of the law of evidence, the case as presented was defective in almost every vital particular. The charge as preferred by the Crown and allowed by the Judge to be submitted to the Jury was, in truth, a charge which it would be impossible to meet or rebut. Throughout the trial there does not seem to have been a single date mentioned or suggested. “I was going one day” (p. 210), “After I had been with him sometime” (p. 211), &c., nothing more definite than this. Whether the crime was supposed to have been committed a week, a month, or a year before the trial does not appear, nor did the judge press or even ask for any particulars. The man was charged with and convicted of coining twenty pieces. He might as well have been charged with and convicted of coining a thousand: the evidence, so far as it was material to the issue to be tried, consisted of a few vague allegations made by a confessed accomplice.

² MANGY.—“The Evidence.” This phrase was then used as equivalent to “the witness.”

that he knew none he could have better than myselfe for that he lookt upon me to be an honest man, and he had some business in hast and he would give me five shillings a day when he had imployment for me. Accordingly I went the next morning and found my master looking out of a window and ready to let me in, but some scamperers passing by disturbed us so that I believe it was almost four o'clock before I could get in privately.

JUDGE.—Those scamperers you speak of I'm afraid were bad husbands.

NORCROSS.—Yes my Lord, afterwards I went and my master came himself and let me in and carried me into a garret Chamber and brought me a bag full of money new clipt, I believe it might contain above a hundred pound, and show'd me the way how I might both file and rub it and afterwards sat down and clipt beside me, and I received five shillings that night for my days work.

JUDGE.—This is nothing to the purpose, I do not ask you any questions about clipping, Rubbing or filing.¹ Did you ever see Mr Mangy stamp or counterfeit the Kings coyne.

NORCROSS.—My Lord, after I had been with him sometime he told me I was very expert, but (says he) you have not seen all my art yet, so bringing up a piece of thin plate as I suppos'd, but he afterwards told me it was mixt mettall and not good plate, so clipping it round into the form of new shillings he began and stamped the one side with exactly the face side of King Charles the Second turning the other side with another stamp he made the cross side exactly and with another instrument at three turns he made nicks upon the edge very dextrously and told me that twenty shillings when finished stood him not above tenn shillings being of mixt mettall.

JUDGE.—But how did he for spoiling the impression he had made on the face side.

NORCROSS.—My Lord, he had a piece of soft wood which he laid upon the maine Bawke of the house, upon which he laid the piece of money when he stamp't the cross side to keep the face side from being harm'd, which when he had placed betwixt the face side and the bawke he strook upon the second stamp with a forge hammer as he did before and made the cross side as I told your Lordship before. The place upon the bawke is grown bright with continual use and fair to be seen, and he likewise told me my Lord that he paid these shillings by putting four or five in every twenty shillings, and this is the whole truth my Lord and you gentlemen of the Jury.

¹ JUDGE.—"This is nothing to the purpose. I do not ask you any questions about clipping, rubbing or filing." The charge was that of "coining." Clipping, however, had been made high treason in Elizabeth's reign (5 Eliz: c. 12, and 18 Eliz: c. 1). Offences relating to the coinage were at this period very rife, and the evils resulting therefrom had at the date of the trial assumed enormous proportions. Speaking of the effect of these crimes on the currency, Macaulay says (Hist: Ch: 21), "At length in the autumn of 1695 it could hardly be said that the country possessed for practical purposes any measure of the value of commodities It was found that £100 (in current silver), which should have weighed about 400 ozs:, did actually weigh at Bristol 240 ozs:, at Cambridge 203, at Exeter 180, and at Oxford only 116."

MANGY.—My Lord, this fellow tells your Lordship they were King Charles the Second Shillings. I desire I may show him a piece of money and see if he can tell whose coin it is for he is an ignorant fellow and cannot read.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, I believe there is many a person in the nation who cannot read Letters upon the book and yet shall know any piece of money you can show them whose coin it is by reason of their frequent seeing of it.

MANGY.—What coin is this—shewing him a piece of money.

NORCROSS.—It is a Queen Elizabeth Shilling—reading the inscription.

MANGY.—What coin is this—shewing him another piece.

NORCROSS.—It is a King Williams Sixpence.

K^s COUNCILL.—Show him one of his own making and see if he knows that.

JUDGE.—Do you see Mr Mangy he not only knows the severall coins but likewise can read which you said he could not—come Mr Attorney what further witnesses have you.

K^s COUNC:—Call Peter Nicholson commonly call'd Peter o'th' horsemill.

P. NICH:—Here I am—who was sworne.

K^s COUNC:—Pray inform my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning Mr Mangy endeavouring to corrupt the K^s evidence.

P. N.—My Lord, I was going through a street in Leeds call'd Bridgegate and Mr Mangy call'd me into one Mortimer's house (a goldsmith who keeps a cup of Ale and was formerly Mr Mangys Journeyman, but being accused for clipping is since run away) where Mr Mangy was saying he wanted one to doe a little private business he had in hand, and Mortimer answ'd a man fitter for your business and a faithfuller person you cannot have then Peter here for he will not fail you in any thing. I told him if I could serve him in any thing I should be very willing, so he bid me be att home and not be absent for att three a Clock in the afternoon he would come to my house and acquaint me what service I should do him and drink a cup of Ale with me for my Lord I keep Ale. Accordingly he came att the time appointed and told me there was one Dorothy Greaves whom he fear'd would inform against him for buying clippings, and desired me to carry her a Guinea and tell her if she would abscond and go into the Country and not appear against him either at Assise or Sessions he would take care to provide horses for both her and me, and I should be the person who should carry her off and that he would maintain her att his own proper charge. So my Lord I went to Doll and told her what Mr Mangy bid me, so she promised she would goe whither I should carry her, so I gave her the guinea, and when the time appointed came Mr Mangy sent me word the horses were ready for us, so I went to Dor: Greaves to see if she was ready to goe but her answer then was she did not, but the design was to convey her where perhaps she might never come again so that she would not goe with me.

JUDGE.—Is this all you can say.

P: NICH:—Yes my Lord.

K^{ts} COUNC:—Call Dorothy Greaves—alias Doll Sim.

D^o Greaves.—Here.

K^{ts} COUN:—Dorothy Greaves pray tell my Lord and the gentlemen of the Jury what you know of the prisoner at the Barr.

D: Greaves.—My Lord, I have sold Mr Mangy clippings.

JUDGE.—Woman, what quantity.

D: GREAVES.—At one time my Lord three ounces of which I gave Information to the Mayor and Aldermen of Leeds, after which this Peter Nicholson came to me as he said, a message from Mr Mangy that if I would not appear against him neither att Assise nor Sessions he had a guinea from him for me as Peter has told you, I told him I would consider of itt and give him an answer, so my Lord I went to the Aldermen I had given my Information to and told them what P: offered me and they bad me not to refuse the guinea if it was offered me again, so I went to P: N: and told him if he would give me the guinea I would convey my selfe so he gave it me; my lord a little after he came to me again and told me the horses were ready, I told him my Lord I would not be conveyed by him for he had cheated me, for I heard Mr Mangy had given him two guineas to give me and he had but given me one. Another time my Lord I rec^d a five shillings piece from M^{rs} Mangy's. On the same account I went to Alderman Massy and made him acquainted with the whole matter and this is all I can say.

JUDGE.—Have you any questions to ask this Evidence M^r Mangy.

MANGY.—My Lord, I can make it appear by my Servants in Court I have turn'd this woman out of doors severall times.

JUDGE.—It appears by that she has been at your house.

K^s COUNC:—Pray let M^r Henry Iveson (Mayor of Leeds), M^r Wm. Massy, M^r John Preston, M^r John Dodgson, Aldermen, be sworne—which was done.

M^r Mayor pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning the prisoner att the Barr.

MAYOR.—My Lord and gentlemen of the Jury, when Geo. Norcross the K^s evidence came to give his Information relating to M^r Mangy he told us, in the garrett chamber where they wrought was fair to be seen a remarkable place upon the bawke which goes cross the chamber on which he stamp't the Shillings he see him coin, which was grown bright and smooth and a particular place where they used to fix their great shears with which they clipt half crowns, for that they had a lessor pair for clipping shillings and sixpences and that we might see whether it was as he had sworne. Alderman Massy, Alderman Preston, Alderman Dodgson, and myself resolved to go and view the room which we did and found both the place where the great shears were fixt and a remarkable place where he used to coyne upon the Bawke.

JUDGE.—Come M^r Massy what can you say.

AL: MASSY.—My Lord, after the K^s Evidence had given his Information against M^r Mangy and mentioned the remarkable places where he clipt and coyn'd I was desirous to see it, upon which I was one that went to view itt, and when I came into one Chamber there was in one corner like shelves of a closett, but it proved to be the way that led into the garrett where Mr Mangy used to clip and coin, and those boards I took to be shelves proved to be the steps into the garrett, and the passage was so strait that I was forc'd to put off my frock and to creep on my hands and my knees going in and coming out.

MANGY.—Alderman Massy, you say the passage was so strait pray then how could you gett up and down.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, Alderman Massy tells you he was to strip himself to gett up, Alderman Preston what say you.

ALD : PRESTON.—My Lord, Geo: Norcross acquainted me that if we would goe with him into Mr Mangy's room he would shew us something to confirm his evidence, accordingly my Lord we went and found the hole where Norcross had said they fixed their great shears for clipping half crowns and the bright place upon the Bawke where Mr Mangy coin'd, and when we were in the room Norcross took up a board and said they used to throw their shears there, upon which I bid him put in his arme and he said he felt nothing, but putting his arm further he pull'd out these shears and observing that betwixt the joynts of the boards was so much distance that something might slip betwixt, we resolved to pull up one of the boards just where they clipt, where we found these clippings of half crowns which I put into this purse with the shears and sealed it up and it was never opened since. Here is likewise a Pumice stone which Geo: Norcross told us he used in rubbing the money when clipt and further told us the last time he made use of it he left it betwixt the slaits, and lookt but found it not. So att our coming out of the house we ask'd one Mr. Benj. Mangy's wife who now lives in the house if she found no such thing wrapt up in a paper and put betwixt the slates, she said truly she did find something in a paper but what use it was for she knew not and said she had laid it by but would bring it, and upon her bringing it though at a distance Norcross seeing the paper said that was it, this being the same.

JUDGE.—Alderman Dodgson what say you.

Alderman Dodgson gave the same evidence touching the chamber as his brethren.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, you hear what Evidence¹ the K^s Witnesses have given, what have you to say for your[self] or what witnesses would you have call'd.

¹ JUDGE.—“Mr. Mangy, you hear what evidence, &c. What witnesses would you have called?” Until the time of Queen Mary a prisoner accused of a capital crime was not even suffered to call witnesses. This practice was based on the quaint and singularly insufficient ground that “as Counsel was not allowed to any prisoner accused of a capital crime, so neither should he be suffered to exculpate himself by the testimony of witnesses.” Mary, however, desired such evidence to be received and, at the date of Mangy's trial, witnesses were examined for the prisoner but not upon oath. It will be noticed, accordingly, that each witness for the prosecution (except Doll Greaves) is expressly stated to have been sworn, but that a similar observation does not apply to the witnesses called by Mangy. The 7 Wm: III., c. 3

MANGY.—I thank your Lordship and desire Captain Barton may be call'd.

CRYER.—Captain Barton—he appeared.

MANGY.—Captain Barton pray tell my Lord and the Jury concerning what you saw att my house.

CAP: BARTON.—My Lord and you gentlemen of the Jury, I had a Curiosity to see the Towne of Leeds upon which I gott the Company of one parson Cowton, a Minister of a Church in this City. Having got to Leeds we lighted att Mr Wainmans att the swan, where when we had been sometime Mr Cowton told me the next house to our Landlords was Mr Mangys who was accus'd for clipping and coining, and if I pleas'd he would go with me into the house to view the room it was said he coin'd in, which when I came there I found it to be a place private enough for such a concern, but they told me he coynd upon the main bawke of the house with a stroke of a forge hammer.

MANGY.—Pray Captain Barton tell my Lord whether it be possible to doe such a thing with a stroake of a Forge hammer.

C. BARTON.—My Lord, I must confess so far as I know what relates to Coining, I think it almost impossible to coin after that manner the bawke not being solid.

JUDGE.—Captain Barton, you say you think it almost impossible to coine upon the mayn bawke of a house because it is not solid, now if the main bawke of a house be not solid, then nothing I know is solid, but pray tell me how came you to go to Leeds on this occasion. I am confident you must be imploy'd by Mr Mangy or somebody else.

C. BARTON.—My Lord, I am altogether a stranger to Mr Mangy and was no ways imploy'd by him.

¹Then one Mr Horsley stood up and desired to be sworne.

Mr HORSLEY.—My Lord, I came hither to day but as a spectator to hear Mr Mangy's tryall, but hearing Capt. Barton tell your Lordship that he is a stranger to Mr Mangy and that he was not sent to Leeds by his order to view his roome, I thought myself oblig'd (which allowed counsel to the accused in cases of treason, and also permitted the examination of his witnesses on oath) had just been passed and came into operation on the 25th March, 1696; but the statute in terms excluded from these benefits persons charged with counterfeiting the King's coin.

¹ "Then one Mr. Horsley stood up and desired to be sworne." This appears to have been done, as the judge remarks—"Do you hear what this gentleman swears?" It seems, therefore, that Horsley was allowed to be interposed at this stage as a witness for the prosecution (see above).

in Conscience to tell your Lordship what I know of the matter, for my Lord when Mr Hawley the ordinary at the castle preached his sermon to the prisoners before the Assise, I was one that came out of the city to hear him and after the sermon I was walking in the castle yard with Mr Mangy and he told me that he had sent Captain Barton to Leeds to view his room where he was said to coine.

JUDGE.—How now Captain Barton do you hear what this gentleman swears, pray what is your imployment.

CA: BARTON.—I am made Controuler att the Mint for York.

JUDGE.—A very pretty man to be imployed in the King and Country's service and comes here in Evidence against the King and to encourage Rogues in that which now the nations grone under, I'll promise you I'll let you be known in another place, how came you to come hither.

CAP: BARTON.—I had not com'd if one of your Lordship's officers had not com'd and told me you sent for me.

JUDGE.—Where is that officer, let him but be found and I'll clap him by the heels, and if the parson was here that went with you I would do as much for him.

But the officer could not be found for it was not one of the Judges officers but a rogueish attorney whom Mangy had imploy'd.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, if you have any more witnesses pray call them.

MANGY.—Cryer, call my man Woodhouse.

CRYER.—Mr Mangy, it is not my place to call your witnesses.¹

MANGY.—But pray S^r do me that favour and I shall satisfie you.

It was observed that Mr Mangy gave the cryer two half crowns, one of which was rank copper which the cryer gave him to change.

CRYER.—Woodhouse, Mr Mangy's man.

WOODHOUSE.—Here.

MANGY.—Woodhouse, pray tell my Lord what you know of Norcross.

WOODHOUSE.—My Lord, this Norcross was one who lived beside my Masters and kept a coblers shop, and has mended my shoes severall times for which I paid him.

JUDGE.—But Woodhouse have you never known Norcross come to your masters upon any other acct.

¹ CRYER.—“Mr. Mangy, it is not my place to call your witnesses.” MANGY.—“But pray sir do me that favour and I shall satisfie you.” This incident affords a striking illustration of the barbarity with which accused persons were then treated, and of the extortion to which they were openly subjected. Matters were placed on a somewhat more humane footing by the statute 1 Anne, st: 2, c. 9.

WOODHOUSE.—No my Lord.

JUDGE.—Nor have you never heard any knocking in a garrett Chamber.

WOODHOUSE.—No my Lord.

NORCROSS.—My Lord, it was agreed betwixt Mr Mangy that to prevent suspicion I was to carry a shoe or two in my hand when I went to work.

JUDGE.—How many days might you work in a week.

NORCROSS.—Sometimes three or four or five days in a week, sometimes not one day just as work came in.

JUDGE.—You just wrought as work came in.

NORCROSS.—Yes my Lord.

JUDGE.—Well Mr Mangy have you any more witnesses to call.

MANGY.—Yes, call my servant maid and nurse.

CRYER.—Mr Mangy's maid and nurse.

MAID.—Here.

JUDGE.—Maid, what can you say concerning Norcross.

MAID.—He was one who mended shoes belonging to the family and I never see more of him then carrying and fetching shoes.

JUDGE.—Do you know nothing of his going into a garrett chamber and whether you ever heard a knocking there.

MAID.—No my Lord.

JUDGE.—But have you no other stairs that leads through this garrett but through the kitchen.

MAID.—Yes my Lord, out of the shop.

JUDGE.—Then why might he not go that way.

CRYER.—Mr Mangy's nurse.

NURSE.—Here.

JUDGE.—How long have you lived with Mr Mangy.

NURSE.—Twelve months my Lord.

JUDGE.—And do you know Geo. Norcross.

NURSE.—Yes, he used to mend our shoes.

JUDGE.—Have you never seen him go into a garrett chamber where your master and he used to work.

NURSE.—No my Lord.

JUDGE.—Call what other witnesses you have Mr Mangy.

MANGY.—I thank your Lordship, call Susan the wife of Geo: Norcross.

JUDGE.—What call you this woman for.

MANGY.—An't please your Lordship Norcross has two wives of which this is one the other lives with him at Leeds, and I hope your Lordship will consider that such a person as this ought not to be credited in this case as an evidence.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, who ever advised you to bring this woman has done you no kindness, ¹you ought to have informed the spiritual court of this and have proceeded against him according to law but all that you bring against the evidence will be insignificant except you can prove him guilty of perjury or malice, but nothing you yet produce amounts to that, but let us hear what she says. Didst thou ever sell Mr Mangy any clippings or was thou ever concerned in the clipping trade with him.

SUSAN.—No my Lord, I am Geo: Norcross wife.

JUDGE.—How came you to be his wife, who married you.

SUSAN.—A very honest gentleman my Lord.

JUDGE.—What was he.

SUSAN.—A Roman Catholick Priest my Lord.

JUDGE.—A very honest gentleman indeed, was it in a Church or a house.

SUSAN.—A house my Lord.

JUDGE.—Was you married by the book of Common Prayer

SUSAN.—No my Lord.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, whoever it was advised you to bring this woman mist the matter, she has done you hurt and no good.

MANGY.—My Lord, I was not the occasion of fetching her, she was brought by Esq^e Holroid, Mr Walker, Mr Firth, Mr Totty, and Mr Lumley, I can prove it by them she was not fetcht upon my acc^t.

JUDGE.—Woman, who hired you to come hither.

SUSAN.—No body my Lord.

JUDGE.—Who bears your charges.

SUSAN.—The Town my Lord.

ALD: DODGSON.—My Lord, when this woman came first to Leeds we had her before my Bro: Massy and my selfe, and examining how she never came to challenge him for her husband before now, he having lived so long among us her answer was, she was hired to it, else had not com'd.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, have you any more witnesses.

MANGY.—Yes my Lord, Cryer call Mr James Blades.

Mr BLADES.—Here.

¹ JUDGE.—“You ought to have informed the spiritual court of this and have proceeded against him according to law.” It does not seem clear what is here meant. Bigamy had at this time been a felony for more than ninety years (1 Jac. I., c. 11).

MANGY.--Mr Blades, pray tell my Lord and the Jury if you did not hear that the Alderm: of Leeds promised Esq^e Holroid that if he would goe home they would cease his prosecution.

JUDGE.--Mr Blades did you hear these words.

Mr BLADES.—No my Lord.

MANGY.—Call Mr Holroid.

CRYER.- -Mr Jno: Holroid.

Mr HOLROYD.--Here.

MANGY. -Mr Holroid, pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you heard concerning the Aldermen of Leeds promising if you would go home they would cease your prosecution.

Mr HOLROYD.—My Lord, I did not say so, I said I met with Mr Lee the town clark of Leeds, and he told me he believed if I would goe home I might for there would be no prosecution against me, but I told him as I was come to have itt try'd I would stay.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, would you call any more witnesses.

MANGY.—Mr Cryer call Mr Henry Ellis, Mr Jn^o Wray, Mr Joseph Lofthouse, Mr Tho. Pease, Mr Geo. Wainman.

CRYER.--Mr Henry Ellis.

Mr ELLIS.—Here.

MANGY. —Mr Ellis, pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of me.

Mr ELLIS.—I have severall times had moneys of him upon bills and the money was such as was then currant, and what I could not pay he was willing to change.

So answered Wray, Pease and Lofthouse.

CRYER.—Mr Geo. Wainman.

Mr WAINMAN.--Here.

MANGY.—Pray Mr Wainman tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of me.

Mr WAINMAN.- -My Lord, Mr Mangy was my next door neighbour and as far as I see of him an honest man. I once bought a parcel of wines of him and paid him for them.

JUDGE. —Mr Wainman, did you never hear any knocking in a garrett chamber.

Mr WAINMAN.—No my Lord.

MANGY.—Cryer call Mr Askell, Mr Hassell and Mr Naylor.

But none of them appeared.

MANGY.—Call Rob^t Colthurst.

COLTHURST.--Here, my Lord this G. Norcross was at Rodwell goal, and I having occation to goe thither I see him there and he asked me how M^r Mangy did, I told him M^r Mangy would hang him, but his answer was he would hang M^r Mangy. My Lord, M^r Mangy is a man I have severall times wrought for and he always paid me well and honestly, I have addled I believe threescore pound of him and he hath paid me to a penny.

JUDGE.—Then you need not fear to loose anything by him. Have you any more witnesses to call M^r Mangy.

MANGY.—None my Lord but what are call'd.

JUDGE.—Have you any friends in Court that can speak for you.

MANGY.—Theres M^r Milner a Merchant.

M^r MILNER.—My Lord, I had never to doe with the man in all my life neither directly nor indirectly but once, when I was newly married I bought some plate of him to the value of forty pound.

JUDGE.—Well, but what can you say as to his Reputation.

M^r MILNER.—He had the same reputation the rest of the goldsmiths in Leeds had.

JUDGE.—M^r MANGY would you ask Norcross any questions.

MANGY.—I hope my Lord by what you have heard my servants speak your Lordship and the jury will not think that I should ere repose so much confidence in Norcross as to let him see me do such an act as he accuses me for. I must confess I have bought great quantitys of clippings of him severall times.

JUDGE.—The fitter man for you to confide in. Have you anything further to say for your selfe.

MANGY.—No my Lord.

JUDGE.—¹Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the evidence that hath been given against M^r Arthur Mangy the prisoner at the Barr, which I shall not be long in repeating of but give you as short a rehearsall of it as I can. In the first place you hear Geo: Norcross the Kings evidence gives you an account of how ¹ JUDGE.—“Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the evidence,” &c. In this partial and conspicuously unfair “summing up” the Judge confines his criticism of the evidence to a criticism of the evidence for the defence. He omits to point out the vague and indefinite character of the testimony of Norcross, Greaves and Nicholson, nor does he advert to the most important fact that these witnesses were all on their own showing accomplices, uncorroborated except by the finding of the “bawke,” &c.; and this, under the circumstances, really amounted to very little, seeing that it was Norcross himself who took the Aldermen to Mangy’s premises saying “he would show us something to confirm his evidence” (see p. 215). It seems probable that Mangy was in custody when these “discoveries” were made. Norcross was afterwards wholly discredited by the Grand Jury (see p. 226); and at the subsequent trial of Holroyd, on the information of Norcross, the very jurors who tried Mangy are said to have found Holroyd guilty “much against their will,” most of them believing he was wrongfully accused; but having found M^r Mangy guilty on the same evidence they could not choose but find him so too!” (see p. 226).

Mr Mangy and he came acquainted and what agreement they came to, that Mr Mangy was to give him five shillings a day for every day he wrought with him which was sometimes three or four or five days in a week but just as work came in, that it was his business to rub and file the money that Mr Mangy clipt, and that he might not be suspected when he went to work the agreement was betwixt them that he should carry a shoe or two in his hand when he went to work as if he was carrying work home which he had done for the house. But that which is most to the purpose is he tells you he see Mr Mangy bring a long piece of thin plate which Mr Mangy told him was mixt mettall and out of that he cut a piece as big as a new shilling which upon a main Bawke of a house in a garrett Chamber he stamped on one side (with exactly the face side) with an instrument, and then to prevent the impression from being harmed he placed a piece of soft wood betwixt the face side and the bawke and with a second instrument he made the Cross side, then with a third instrument he made nicks upon the edges, and when he had made these shillings as he cal'd them he told Norcross that twenty of them when finished cost him about ten shillings and that he paid them by putting four or five in every twenty shillings. He further tells you the respective places where they performed all their work, one place they had where they placed their great shears to clip half crowns for they had a lesser pair for clipping shillings and sixpences with, and to give greater credit to what he has sworne you have it confirm'd by the Major of Leeds and three Aldermen of Leeds, for their own satisfaction went to view the roome and they tell you they found things just as the Kings evidence has told you, and for further confirmation you have it proved by these gentlemen that whilst they were in the garrett chamber Norcross show'd them a private place where they used to lay their shears, and one of them bid him put in his arm and feel if there was anything whereupon further putting his arme they found the shears they used for clipping small money, as also upon taking up a board in the floor they found some clippings of half crowns under the place where the evidence had told them they fixed their shears for that use, you have also a pumise stone shown you with which Norcross tells you he rub'd the money after Mr Mangy had clipt it, all which circumstances confirms Norcross evidence very much. It appears further by the other witnesses, Pe. Nicholson and Doro: Greaves, that Mr Mangy did imploy P. Nicholson to bribe Dor: Greaves with a guinea not to appear against him either at Assise nor Sessions for buying clippings which argues much guilt in Mr Mangy. Thus far gentlemen you have the Kings witnesses which in my thought is very plain and full. Now the defence Mr Mangy makes is first by showing Norcross a piece of money saying he could not read, thereby to detect him in his evidence that he could not know King Charles the seconds Coin from others (he having sworne it was a Shilling in Imitation of King Charles the second that he see him coin). Now it fairly appear'd to you that he not only knew the difference of coins but that he could read the inscription. The second is by bringing his maid and nurse to prove upon what acc^t Norcross used to his house to come and that they never knew any other business he had but his own calling of mending the families shoes. He brings likewise Captain Barton (one employ'd in the mint for York) to tell you he believes it impossible to coin in that room. Now Captain Barton tells you he went to Leeds out of curiosity to see the towne and not by any intreaty of Mr Mangy he having no acquaintance with him, but to show you that this was a made journey betwixt them com's Mr Horsley a Citizen, who heard Mr Mangy say he had sent Capt. Barton to Leeds to view the chamber. He brings you likewise a woman who tells you the evidence has two wives of which she is one, and yet by what she says it does not appear it is so, but was hired to come as you hear Alderman Dodgson tells you she confest before him if not by Mr Mangy yet by some of his accomplices. But in case she had been lawfully married to him yet he having never been lawfully convicted of it this could not lessen or invalidate his evidence against Mr Mangy. Nor do I find that Mr Mangy can charge Norcross with so much as one immorall action, but by making such defence as this he makes himself appear the more guilty.

Gentlemen, if you believe what has been proved against Mr Mangy be true you are to find him guilty, but on the contrary if you believe what Mr Mangy and his servants tell you and discredit the evidence for the King you are to find him not guilty, but so far as I see gentlemen it appears otherwise, but it is not I but you must be his Judges in this case, so I shall say no more to you.

Then the Jury withdrew and in less than half an hour returned and were called over.

CLR: OF ARR.—Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict.

JURY.—Yes.

CLR: OF ARR.—Who shall say for you.

JURY.—Our Foreman.

CLR: OF ARR.—Arthur Mangy Hold up thy hand. How say you, is Arthur Mangy guilty of the high treason whereof he stands indicted or not guilty.

FOREMAN.—Guilty.

CLR. OF ARR.—Lord have mercy upon him. Look to him Goaler, what goods or chattels, Lands or Tenements had he att the time of the high treason committed or att any time since.

JURY.—None that we know of.

CL: OF ARR:—Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it, you say Arthur Mangy is guilty of the high treason whereof he stands Indicted, but that he had no goods or chattels, lands or tenements at the time of the high treason committed or att any time since and so say you all.

JURY.—Yes.

Then the Goaler took back his prisoner to the Castle and the Court went about other business till about ten a Clock att night, when the Prisoners who had been found guilty were brought into Court and Mr Mangy sett to the Barr, having his eldest son in one hand and his eldest daughter in the other.

CL. OF ARR.—Arthur Mangy hold up thy hand. Thou stands convicted of high treason for counterfeiting the Currant Coin of this realme, whatt hast thou to say for thy selfe why sentence shall not be pronounced against thee to die according to law.

MANGY.—My Lord, I beg of your Lordship in the midst of Judgment to remember mercy and to have pitty on my poor children of which these are eldest of Seaven, their mother att this time att the point of Death in Childbed of the seaventh.

JUDGE.—Mr Mangy, you should have considered the loss your children should have when it was in your power to have prevented it, it is not in mine now to show you any favour for the sentence which is going to be put on you is not mine but what the law inflicts which is—¹That you be carried to the place from whence you came and from thence be drawn on a hurdle to the place of Execution, there to be hanged by the neck till you be dead and the Lord have mercy upon your Soul.

The Execution was deferred till after the time that the ordinary Malefactors were executed and after that he had two severall reprieves, at last his death warrant came in pursuant of which he was executed the second day of October following in the presence of severall thousands of spectators. Before he was put off he gave out and sung part of the 73^d psalme from the 25 verse to the end, and making his Address to the people present he desired them not to throw the ignominious death in the teeth of his wife and Children for they knew not but it might be any of their own cases to die by false accusation as he declared he did. Delivering the Sherif a paper which he declared as he was a dying man contained nothing but truth, after which the Executioner did his office and when he was dead and cut down his body was conveyed in a mourning hearse to York and the day following was buried att ²Church in great state. Mr Coulton (the Minister mentioned in the Tryall) preached his funerall sermon and took his text in the 73 psalme and 25 verse.

There were taken up besides Mr Mangy the following persons—

¹ "The Sentence." A prisoner convicted of High Treason was dragged to the gallows, hanged by the neck, and cut down alive. His entrails were taken out and burned while he was yet alive; afterwards his head was cut off, and his body divided into four parts. In coining cases, however, which were regarded as of a milder type, this punishment was reduced to hanging simply.

Bramhope.

BEFORE the Norman Conquest, an English thane, Ulchil, owned a great manor of eight carucates in Bramhope, of the yearly value of forty shillings. He also held part of Leathley, on the opposite side of the Wharfe. Another Englishman, Gamelbar, had extensive estates in Claro, comprising Plumpton, Brimham, Braham, and other vills, and also in Grassington, Glusburn, and elsewhere in Craven. All these lands were given by William I. to one of his Norman followers, Gilbert Tison. To the same man the king also assigned a number of manors in the East Riding, the greater part of which had been taken from an Englishman named Aluvin. Gilbert's chief manor in the East Riding was "Alvengi," supposed to be Kirk Ella: in the West Riding Bramhope was his principal possession. The latter vill had in the twenty years following the Conquest largely deteriorated in value, and is described in Domesday as "waste." Ulchil was allowed to retain possession of it, under Gilbert, but his Leathley land had been taken from him.

Not many years after the Domesday book was compiled, Gilbert Tison appears for some reason to have lost his estates. Stapleton suggests that he was possibly implicated in Robert de Mowbray's unsuccessful rebellion in 1095, and adds that his forfeited lands were divided between Nigel de Albini (ancestor of the second line of Mowbray) and Ivo de Vesci, but that Gilbert was restored to royal favour under Henry I., and regained some part of his lands. There is no doubt that a large part of the estates which had been his was afterwards in possession of the Mowbrays: but a certain share seems to have been granted to the Percy family, and Bramhope was included in this portion.

By the Percies, Bramhope was subinfeudated to a new race of owners. Among the numerous vassals of that great family, we find in the early part of the twelfth century a certain Ralph, who seems to have originally held land under them in Irton near Seamer, and probably also at Staxton. Progressing in the favour of the Percies, he appears to have obtained from them in the time of Stephen a grant of the manor of Bramhope, as well as of the valuable manor of Dishforth in the North Riding. He had probably several sons, the eldest of whom, Baldwin, generally known as Baldwin Fitz Ralph, succeeded him. Baldwin is recorded as holding from William de Percy in 1166 a complete knight's fee, and the fourth and tenth parts of another fee. With the descendants of Ralph and Baldwin the manor of Bramhope continued for more than a century.

Before the new owners had been established at Bramhope many years, we can trace the beginning of that slow but steady movement which ultimately brought about another change, and placed the whole vill in the possession of two religious houses—St. Leonard's Hospital at York, and Kirkstall Abbey. Of these two, St. Leonard's was the first to establish a footing in Bramhope—indeed, it had obtained a grant of land in the vill before the Cistercian monks had come to Kirkstall, or at any rate in the very earliest years of the establishment there.

The great house of St. Leonard's, the most important hospital in the north, had its origin in pre-Norman times. It seems to have been established as a kind of relief department for York Minster, to enable the clergy there to rid themselves of the ever-increasing work in connection with the care of the sick and assistance of the poor, which was recognised as one of their proper functions, but which was becoming a task too heavy for them. The story goes that in the year 936 the Minster received from King Athelstan, as a thank-offering for a victory over the Scots, a grant of the right to receive a thrave (i.e. twenty sheaves) of corn from every carucate of land under the plough in the diocese of York : and on the strength of this very handsome endowment it was decided to erect a separate hospital, in which the work of relief might be carried on without interfering with the services of the Cathedral. The buildings of the establishment ultimately covered a great part of the ground between the west end of that edifice and the river.

It should be noticed that the gift of Athelstan—if there really were such a gift—seems to have been a cheap one for the king : for according to the narrative the thraves had previously been voted to him by the men of the diocese on condition that he undertook to exterminate the wolves with which the country was infested. The king, and after him the ecclesiastics, no doubt punctually collected the corn : but the wolves continued to roam over the hills and through the woods of the north for centuries after the bargain had been made.

How far the Athelstan tradition may be correct we cannot now say, but it seems certain that by the time of the Conquest the hospital did exist as an adjunct to the Minster, and with some claim, however acquired, to the tax on corn. William I. is said to have confirmed this claim. William II., though not a religious man, or much infected with the fashion of endowing abbeys or religious houses, seems to have been a consistent patron of the hospital. Stephen rebuilt the house after a fire which occurred in his reign, and the rebuilding included a church within the outer walls of the establishment, which was dedicated to St. Leonard, and from which the whole hospital, hitherto like the Minster called St. Peter's, gradually became known as St. Leonard's, and, although no doubt always in close touch with the Minster, it likewise became an independent establishment. In the twelfth and thirteenth centuries endowments came rapidly in, and St. Leonard's became a great and wealthy foundation. Besides its original right to a share of all the corn grown in the county, it had acquired manors and lands, churches, advowsons, rents, villeins, houses, herds and flocks. By the middle of the fourteenth century its income had risen to a sum equal probably in purchasing power to something like twenty-five thousand pounds of our money of to-day. Out of its ample revenues were maintained two or three hundred sick and poor,—the religious element in the hospital, consisting of several brothers and sisters whose lives were spent in the care of the sick inmates,—and the army of attendants and servants necessary for so large an establishment.

It is difficult to over-estimate the benefits which must have accrued to the city and immediate district from the existence of the house. Yet St. Leonard's does not appear to have been altogether a popular establishment. It seems to have had a full share of quarrelling and litigation. Of course the somewhat oppressive tax on corn which it claimed was a fruitful source of trouble, and repeated appeals had to be made to the king and his courts for assistance in enforcing this privilege of the house. Then, in addition to the usual disputes with regard to other rights of the hospital, there seems to have frequently been bad blood between the inmates and the citizens of York,—sometimes resulting in acts of violence, not invariably on the side of the citizens. Moreover, from the latter part of the fourteenth century, financial troubles set in. A considerable diminution occurred in the revenues of the house. In 1409 the income was less than one-half of what it had been forty or fifty years before, and a century later there had been a further serious falling off. Of course a corresponding decrease was necessary in the number of sick and poor relieved. Probably one reason for the decline of the house lay in the fact that in later times its chief was usually an absentee. In the early part of the reign of Edward I. the king established his right to the patronage of the house,¹ as against the Dean and Chapter of the Minster, and the wardenship of the hospital seems to have become little more than a well-paid sinecure, bestowed by successive kings on dignitaries of the church and others to whom it was wished to show favour, and who probably as a rule devoted only nominal attention to the affairs of the establishment. We may surmise that the hospital's usefulness had much decreased at the dissolution, but still its arbitrary destruction by Henry VIII. must have been a real and serious loss to the poorer classes of York.

With this great house the history of Bramhope is bound up during nearly four centuries. Successive grants gradually brought a large share of the lands of the vill into the power of the hospital, and about a century and a quarter after the first of these grants it obtained the manorial rights from the heir of Ralph, the vassal of the Percies, and the long association of his family with the vill came to an end.

The date of the earliest connection of St. Leonard's with Bramhope can be fixed within a very few years. In 1148 the hospital obtained a detailed bull of confirmation from Pope Eugenius III. This bull contains no reference to Bramhope.² In 1156 a second bull was obtained from Adrian IV., and this mentions, among other donations, "in Bramhopa, four bovates."³ We may therefore conclude that the first grant had been made between these dates, and though the donor is not named, there can be little doubt that the four bovates were those given by the wife of a certain Uchtred, and confirmed by her son Norman by the following charter :—⁴

"Be it known to all present and future that I Norman, son of Utred, have granted and by this my present charter confirmed to God and the poor of the hospital of St. Peter of York the four bovates of land in Bramhopa which my mother gave to them of her free maritage, in pure and perpetual alms, &c. Witnesses, Henry the priest of Chircabi, Gualemus son of Tor of Ottaley, Stephen the chaplain of Henry,

¹ A similar claim had been advanced by his father in 1245, but was apparently not very strongly urged.

⁴ Rawlinson MSS., Bodleian Library, No. B 455, fo. 3. This valuable MS., from which I shall frequently have occasion to quote, is the second volume of the chartulary of St. Leonard's, the first volume being the Cottonian MS. in the British Museum, referred to in the preceding notes. This latter volume contains the Papal bulls, royal privileges, charters relating to the "thraves" and advowsons, and a number of grants of property in York, arranged by streets. The Oxford volume contains the grants in other vills.

Gervasius the priest, Adam my son, Gualter my brother, William son of Hugh son of Ebrard, Simon son of Gospatrick, Henry of York, Roger son of Peter de Ardingtuna, Chictus son of Uttred, Guesmundus de Adela, Gamel son of Archil."

This Norman Fitz-Uchtred was a somewhat prominent Yorkshire landowner, about the middle of the twelfth century. He held lands under the Percies in several places, chiefly in the Craven district. He was an early benefactor to Fountains, and it appears from a charter by Roger, Archbishop of York, given in the Memorials of Ripon, i. 259, that he had owned a large tract of land in Ingerthorp, which he had disposed of to Henry Murdac, the previous Archbishop. He was dead by 1166, when his son Adam held (jointly with Henry fil' Ypolitus) a knight's fee from William de Percy.¹ The principal seat of the family appears to have been at Rimington, near Gisburn, not far from Salley Abbey, to which foundation they were somewhat liberal benefactors.

It will be observed that in the above confirmatory charter Norman refers to the four bovates as having been his mother's "maritage," or land given to her at her marriage. Who this lady was is not known, but the fact that so considerable a tract of land in Bramhope was assigned to her suggests that she may have been some connection, possibly even a daughter, of Gilbert Tison, and have received the land from him. If so, we may further conjecture that perhaps her husband may be identified with "Uctred fil' Alwini," a friend or dependant of Gilbert's who was called to witness his charter of land in Gunby and elsewhere to Selby Abbey (Selby Chartulary, No. 707). It has before been mentioned that Gilbert had succeeded to the East Riding estates of an Englishman named Aluuin, and it may be that this dispossessedthane and Ailwin, the father of Uchtred, were one and the same person.

The attestation clause of Norman's charter above quoted has some points of interest. In "Henry the priest of Chircabi," we have no doubt the earliest recorded incumbent of Kirkby Overblow. We have mention of a brother of Norman's, as well as of the son Adam who succeeded him. But perhaps the most noticeable name in the list of witnesses is the seventh. "William son of Hugh son of Ebrard," may beyond question be identified as William de Leathley, the head of a family which stood high among the Yorkshire gentry, and which this charter enables us to trace back to the time of the Conqueror. For when Domesday was compiled Ebrard held under William de Percy manors in Hagenby, Leathley and Linton, besides Castley from the Crown. A century later all these manors were in the possession of William de Leathley, and the connection between the two men is fixed by the present deed. The history of the Leathleys is a somewhat interesting one. Their principal seat was at Leathley, and they owned a great property extending from the Washburn to the Wharfe, and comprising, besides Leathley, the vills of Stainburn and Castley. They held the manor of Hagenby, near Tadcaster,—a vill which has disappeared,—and they had acquired extensive estates in Baildon and Horsforth. The family might have taken deeper and permanent root, and continued to flourish in Yorkshire, but for a certain weakness which is well marked in several generations—a superstitious liberality in granting away their lands, which ultimately brought them to ruin. In proportion to their resources their gifts to religious houses were perhaps on a more lavish scale than those of any family in the county. Carucate after carucate went to abbey and priory and nunnery, until in the middle of the thirteenth century Adam de Leathley, great-grandson of William, then in pecuniary trouble and in the hands of the Jews of York, sold to Henry Percy his remaining rights in the ancient inheritance of his house, and the Leathleys practically disappear from the history of the county of York.

About the time when Norman's mother made her grant to St. Leonard's, the Cistercian abbey of Kirkstall was established within William Peitevin's lordship of Headingley. The success of the young foundation in attracting endowments was immediate. Before the monks had been many months at Kirkstall they had acquired valuable properties in Roundhay, Chapeltown, and Bramley, as well as in Headingley. Before they had been there a dozen years, the foundation of their great estate in Horsforth had been laid, the valuable grange of Micklethwaite near Wetherby had been established, and they had obtained considerable properties in the neighbourhood of Keighley, and Cantley near Doncaster. By 1172 they had received their first grant in Cookridge, and some time afterwards Baldwin Fitz-Ralph, lord of Bramhope, was called to witness the cession of the whole of Cookridge to the monks, by its owner, Roger Mustel. Between Cookridge and Bramhope there was a wood called Heselwood, and during the last quarter of the twelfth century Baldwin made over to the abbey, of which one of his sons, Adam, had become an inmate, all his share in this wood.¹

Having once established themselves within the territory of Bramhope, the Kirkstall monks thenceforward steadily increased their possessions there. Indeed, all the information we have of the history of the place for nearly a century is in the long series of charters by which the ownership of the whole vill was gradually transferred to Kirkstall and St. Leonard's. Baldwin's son and successor, Ralph,¹ was a munificent donor to both houses. Besides the very liberal gift to Kirkstall which is recorded in the Coucher Book of that abbey² he, at a later date, released to the monks two bovates in Bramhope which they had held from him at term.³ His gifts to St. Leonard's, though not on so extensive a scale as those to Kirkstall—he had doubtless a preference for the establishment of which his brother was a member—were handsome. There are four of them recorded in B 455, Rawlinson MSS., Bodleian Library. Ralph did not confine his benefactions to these two religious houses. He gave a large tract of land in his vill of Dishforth to Fountains: he also appears as a benefactor to Whitby Abbey. It may be remarked that it was in Ralph's time that the grant to Kirkstall of an acre in Bramhope by one of his tenants, Robert de Bramhope, entered as No. cxxvii. in the coucher book of the abbey, occurred. The donation was a small one, but it is now of interest, because the original deed of gift is in the Leeds Public Library, within a few miles of the place where it was sealed by Robert de Bramhope and witnessed by Ralph Fitz-Baldwin, seven hundred years ago.

By a charter, granted probably in the early part of the thirteenth century, Ralph conveyed to one of the Leathleys, Roger son of Hugh de Leathley, eleven bovates of land in Bramhope which had been held by four tenants, Ivel (or Joel), Alan the reeve, Ralph de Tiveling, and Serlo son of Serlo.⁴ To these eleven bovates Ralph, by a later grant, apparently added two more,⁵ and Roger obtained a further bovat from Elias son of Robert de Bramhope⁶—perhaps the Robert who gave to

Kirkstal the acre of land above-mentioned. The result usual with the Leathleys followed. Stevens gives the copy of a grant of somewhat later date, by which Roger conveyed the whole fourteen bovates to Kirkstall Abbey.

Besides his grants of land, Ralph Fitz-Baldwin had dealings of a different nature with the establishments at Kirkstall and St. Leonard's. We find that he and his son Baldwin sold to the abbey of Kirkstall a serf or villein, conveyed as "Adam son of Henry de Bramhope," with his progeny and chattels, the price being three marks of silver (£2).¹ Baldwin afterwards granted to the abbey another villein, Thomas le Esquier of Bramhope, and a third, called Gilbert;² for the latter, with his family and chattels, eight shillings were paid.³ Ralph Fitz-Baldwin had likewise included in one of his grants to St. Leonard's Syerithe or Syhetta, a neve or female serf, with all her progeny. This woman was the wife of Peter de Dringhouses, and they held jointly two bovates of land in Bramhope. As Peter was not included in the gift, it may be inferred that he was a free man; if so, his children followed the servile state of their mother.

Ralph Fitz-Baldwin, lord of Dishforth and Bramhope, died during the first quarter of the thirteenth century. By his lavish grants he had doubtless to some extent weakened the position of his family. His wife was Emma, a daughter of the house of Darell, of Sessay near Thirsk. Sessay was part of the ancient possessions of the bishops of Durham, and was held under them by the Percies, by whom it had been subinfeudated to the Darells in the reign of Henry I., if not still earlier. Throughout the eight centuries which have since elapsed, the manor has never passed into the hands of aliens. The Darells continued to hold it until the reign of Henry VII., and their heiress then brought it to the ¹ British Museum, Additional MSS. 27413, fo. 6^d. It would seem either that Adam for some reason again came into the possession of Ralph, or that he (Adam) was enfranchised by the monks and the manumission confirmed by Ralph, as the same MS. (fo. 7) contains the following interesting example of a charter of manumission:—"Sciant, &c., quod ego Radulfus filius Baldwini (quietum) clamavi de me et de heredibus meis Adam filium Henrici cum tota sequela sua et cum omnibus catallis suis: ita quod libere abibit, et manebit liber homo ubicunque voluerit, sine clamo mei vel heredum meorum. Pro [blank] heredibus meis [blank] dedit mihi predictus Adam duas marcas argenti et octo solidos." The value of the sum (£1 14s. 8d.) which the serf had been compelled to scrape together to satisfy his lord may be estimated from the fact that the day's wage of a labourer was at that period probably under twopence.

³ Ibid., fo. 7^d. There is another local instance of the price of a serf, in the Dodsworth MSS., viii. 182^d, where the Templars of Newsome paid Adam son of William de Leeds, two marks (£1 6s. 8d.) for William son of William Joce, of Shipker (Sheepscar), with his progeny and belongings.

Dawnays, with which family it still remains. Emma Darell, the wife of Ralph Fitz-Baldwin, was probably a daughter of Thomas Darell, who held the vill in 1166. After Ralph's death she quitclaimed to the house of St. Leonard's any dowry rights she might have in the lands in Bramhope which Ralph had given to the hospital.

Ralph and Emma had at least two sons, Baldwin and Marmaduke (named after his uncle, Marmaduke Darell), who appear to have successively held the inheritance. Baldwin does not seem to have been notable for his gifts to religious establishments, but there is one very interesting grant by him, which shows that in the first half of the thirteenth century the ancient chapel of St. Giles at Bramhope—the tradition of which survives, though no part of the building remains,—had already been in existence for some time:—

“To all sons of Holy Mother Church, &c., Baldwin, son of Ralph de Bramhope, greeting. Know, &c., that I have given, granted, &c., to God and the Chapel of St. Giles of Bramhope and the Chaplain thereof, one toft and one acre of land in Bramhope, and the toft of the churchyard, namely, that toft in which the chaplains were accustomed to reside (manere) and half an acre in the south part of Solorberg by the side of the stream (juxta ripam), and half an acre on the west of the road which leads from Solorberg to the old dam (stagnum) in pure and perpetual alms, &c. I have likewise given to the said chapel and its chaplain common in all easements belonging to the said vill of Bramhope. (Warranty.) Witnesses, Sir (domino) Hugh de Lelay and his son, William de Pouel (Pool) and his son, Thomas esquire (‘armigero’: no doubt the ‘native’ alluded to on page 235) of Bramhope, Peter of the same, Henry of the same, Hugh de Cressekelde, Thomas de Karleton, and many others.”

This donor, Baldwin, son of Ralph de Bramhope, was dead by 1251, and had been succeeded by his brother Marmaduke. Meanwhile the abbey of Kirkstall seems to have been making continual progress in its acquisition of lands in the vill. There is a case alluded to in the Kirkstall Coucher Book,¹ which illustrates the steady persistency with which the monks increased their estates. They had acquired a considerable property at a place then known as Aldfeld or Oldfield near Bingley, and in 1226 they concluded an arrangement by which half a carucate of land there was made over to them by Emma, widow of a certain Henry de Morton, Emma receiving in exchange a similar quantity of land in Bramhope, to be held from the abbey, for which, however, a yearly rent of 6s. 8d. was to be paid to the monks. This half carucate in Bramhope Emma afterwards gave to her son-in-law Simon de Bowland, husband of her daughter Alice, subject of course to the payment of the yearly rent; and still later we find that Simon gave the whole of the land back to the monks, who would then be able to relet it, at a rent no doubt considerably higher than that which Simon had been liable to pay. The Abbot took charters of confirmation of Simon's release from both Emma and Alice. Afterwards the monks obtained from Simon a further gift of an additional quarter of a carucate which he held in Bramhope. Finally, Simon and Alice—all their land in Bramhope having probably now passed from them,—released to the abbey their right to take seven loads of wood yearly from Heselwood.¹

Another considerable benefactor to the monks of Kirkstall was a man called Ralph, son of Serlo de Bramhope, from whom they obtained no less than eight grants of land, amounting in all to about three bovates.² It is not necessary however to recite all the small donations of land in the village made to the abbey during the first fifty or sixty years of the thirteenth century. There is a summary in the Monasticon Anglicanum, vol. v., p. 539, and several are given in full in Stevens, vol. II., App., pp. 250-252. The total result may be seen in a memorandum of the year 1315, printed in the Kirkstall Coucher Book, No. L, to be noticed presently.

It was only natural that the house of Kirkstall, considering its proximity and the fact that its possessions now adjoined Bramhope on three sides, should be more successful than the remoter establishment at York in obtaining donations in the vill, and we find that during the first fifty years of the thirteenth century the acquisitions of St. Leonard's were not of much importance. The repeated grants by Ralph Fitz-Baldwin have already been mentioned (page 234): the earlier of these however, if not the whole, must be referred to the previous century. The largest of Ralph's gifts here was a grant of two bovates, and this was witnessed by Thomas, brother of Paulinus the well-known master of the hospital, whose history has been narrated in a previous part of these Miscellanea. To about the end of the twelfth century also must be referred another grant of two bovates by Jordan son of Robert Runsi or Runcin, respecting which a fine was levied at York on 27th January, 1199, between Jordan as plaintiff, and the hospital and Peter son of Walter (doubtless the holder under the hospital) as deforciant. Jordan quitclaimed, and received eighteen shillings from the deforciants.¹ And we may likewise assign to about the close of the same century, or very early in the thirteenth, two grants by Serlo son of Gamel de Bramhope, both tested by Ralph Fitz-Baldwin.² This donor was probably the father of that Ralph Fitz Serlo already noticed as a benefactor to Kirkstall (page 237). The land given by him to the hospital seems to have been in the east part of the town's fields, adjoining the manor of Brearey. But after the earliest years of the thirteenth century a new generation appears to have grown up, which inclined more to the adjacent house of Kirkstall than to the York foundation, and the local gifts to St. Leonard's which can be certainly assigned to the next forty or fifty years, and of which record remains, are not more than one or two in number. The principal one was a donation by Ralph son of Alan de Bramhope³ of a bovate of land with a toft and croft in Bramhope "beside the land of Robert de Heton." This was witnessed by Hugh de Lelay, Geoffrey de Arthington, Alan de Brearey, Henry Northby and others, and confirmed by Marmaduke son of Ralph Fitz-Baldwin.

From about the middle of the thirteenth century the charters in favour of St. Leonard's again became more numerous until the passing of the Mortmain Act in 7 Edw. I. almost stopped them. Among these we find three grants by members of the family of Northby or Noriby, at this time a family of some standing in the village. The first of the name on record is Robert Northby, who was living about the beginning of the century. Henry Northby frequently occurs at a somewhat later date. He was possibly the father of William de Northby de Bramhope, who gave the hospital all the uncultivated land appertaining to his four bovates in Bramhope, and also an acre of his land there adjoining the culture of the Abbot of Kirkstall, by two charters witnessed by Marmaduke fil' Marmaduke de Bramhope,—the first one being likewise witnessed by Robert de Pool and Ralph de Arthington.⁴ The brethren also took deeds of confirmation at the same time from Robert Northby, William's son and heir. We afterwards find this Robert Northby conveying to Marmaduke de Dishforth (lord of Bramhope) "a plot of land with the grange thereon and four butts of arable land adjoining that grange, with the demesne toft of William my father in which he

Other grants of this period (i.e. about the third quarter of the thirteenth century) to the same hospital may be briefly noticed. Simon son of William de Bramhope, gave the master and brethren all the land he held within the demesne in Bramhope.² Robert son of John de Cumpton, a cleric, gave a toft and croft (acquired from Margaret daughter of Elias ad fontem), and some land.³ William son of Swain de Grayrigg in Kendal, "manens in Bramhope," and Ascelota his wife gave two acres and a half,⁴ and Ascelota, daughter of William de Bramhope—no doubt the same woman—gave a toft which was Isolda Morolf's, and a rood of land.⁵

More important than these were the renewed grants by the lords of the manor, in connection with which the manorial history may be for a moment reverted to. It has been already stated that Ralph Fitz-Baldwin held the manor about the beginning of the thirteenth century, that he was succeeded by his son Baldwin, the donor to the chapel, and that the next lord was Baldwin's brother Marmaduke, who seems to have been known indifferently as Marmaduke Darell, Marmaduke de Dishforth, or Marmaduke de Bramhope. In 38 Hen. III. (1253-4) Marmaduke Darell son of Ralph son of Baldwin de Disceford, confirmed all his ancestors had given in the town of Dishforth to Fountains Abbey. He was on the jury at the inquisition held 43 Hen. III. concerning the lands of Richard and William Percy.⁶ He had two sons, Thomas and Marmaduke, of whom Thomas appears to have been the elder and to have succeeded his father.⁷ The connection of this ancient house with Bramhope was, however, now nearing its close.¹ Marmaduke recommenced the alienation of the land there, by granting to the hospital four tofts and six bovates of land which his father had given him,² and finally, by a charter witnessed by Patrick de Westwick and Ralph de Burley, knights, Simon Ward, rector of Guiseley, Ralph de Arthington, and others, Thomas de Disceford, with the assent of Ellen his wife, conveyed to St. Leonard's his whole manor of Bramhope, with all the lands, rents and other appurtenances.³ The date of this charter can be approximately fixed. On the 16th June, 1272, Henry Wygan, a brother of Richard Mansel, of Hutton Sessay, released to the hospital all his rights in the vill of Bramhope which, with the appurtenances, he had held at ferm from Thomas son of Marmaduke de Disceford:⁴ the grant by Thomas to the house may be assigned to a date shortly before this; of the ten witnesses to Henry's release seven attest also the charter by Thomas. It should be noted that the jurors for the returns called the Hundred Rolls in 1275-6, stated that "the Master of St. Leonard's of York holds half the town of Bramhope of the gift of Thomas de Disceford, these four years past."

¹ Rawlinson MSS., Bodleian, B 455, fo. 2. The hospital obtained another grant of a toft and four acres from Ralph son of William de Northby de Bramhope—perhaps a brother of Robert—at a somewhat later date. This land, Ralph recites, had descended to him "by hereditary right of William my father and Alice my mother." (Ibid. fo. 6.)

⁷ It should be added that there are one or two references which seem to suggest that Marmaduke was the elder son, but on the whole the evidence is in favour of Thomas. If Marmaduke really succeeded his father, he died s. p. within a few years, as Thomas was certainly in possession about the time of the accession of Edward I.

It is probable that the grants to the hospital, both by Marmaduke and Thomas, were really sales, and not gifts. We know that at this time there was money trouble in the family. Not long previously

¹ I append a rough sketch-pedigree of this family, up to the time when it ceased to be connected with Bramhope:—

This pedigree does not profess to be exhaustive, and further research may probably add other names.

Thomas had sold to Kirkstall Abbey a villein, Ralph son of Alice de Bramhope, for seven marks which, he says, the convent "have given to me in my great necessity."¹ Perhaps the abbey would also have liked very well to acquire the manor, but it was not then in a position to do so. The house was already involved in the financial troubles which came to a head at St. Sever, fifteen years later.²

On the 15th May, 1274, an agreement was made between Kirkstall and St. Leonard's, by which the Abbot and Convent of the former house acknowledged themselves to hold all their lands in Bramhope from the hospital, doing to the Master and Brethren all the services which they had been wont to do to Thomas de Disceford and his ancestors.³ On (apparently) the same day "William, styled Abbot of Kirkstall in Airedale" and his Convent grant to the Master and Brethren of the hospital their watermill in Bramhope, with the suit of their men in that vill, at a yearly rent of forty shillings.⁴ This rent continued to the dissolution of the two houses.

The hospital of St. Leonard's did not lose time in obtaining royal confirmation of its acquisition. In the return called Kirkby's Inquest, 1284-5, it is stated that Bramhope was sometime taxable, yielding to the king's wapentake of Skyrack three shillings by the year, but that now the brethren of St. Leonard's, by charter from the present king, hold the vill free from all service.

The Mortmain Act of 7 Edw. I. prohibited the alienation of lands to religious bodies, except under special license from the Crown, and thenceforward of course the charters, for more than a century almost our only source of information as to the history of the village, are comparatively few in number.⁵ In the Kirkstall Coucher Book (No. L) we find a memorandum showing the total extent of the estate which that abbey had acquired in Bramhope in 1315, after the donations had practically come to an end. It comprised more than 93 acres of demesne arable land and about 118 acres in the hands of tenants. As six acres made one bovat in this vill, the whole holding of the abbey was a little under $4\frac{1}{2}$ carucates, and the land is stated to be worth fourpence an acre by the year, so that the total annual value was about £3 10s. A hundred and forty-four years afterwards, the abbey's rents from the lands had increased to £5 3s. 10d.¹ At the dissolution, eighty years later, they had further increased to £6 16s. 4d., including the houses on the land.² It would appear therefore that, speaking roughly, the value of this property had not quite doubled in more than two centuries.

The Hundred Rolls of 3-4 Edward I. refer to a man who was connected with Bramhope and Bingley, and who occurs rather frequently in charters relating to these places during the second half of the thirteenth century. This was Robert Vilayn, whose name expresses his original condition, but who would appear to have made his way into a considerably higher position, until at length we find his name in a list of witnesses placed before that of the representative of the ancient family of Arthington. The methods by which he appears to have raised himself are indicated in the Hundred Rolls, where there are two references to him:—

“The jury say that Henry de Normanton, formerly sheriff, apprehended Robert Vileyn at Bramhope, who was indicted of the concealment of Henry de Buckley and Blythe de Ryseford, and Robert afterwards made a fine for forty shillings for having a respite until the next County Court, at which he did not appear, and again made a fine for ten marks.”

“The same Robert Vileyn whilst he was bailiff of Bingley took of the said Blythe, who was indicted, ten shillings of redemption, and moreover seized all his land in Riseford, and still holds it. The jury also say that Robert took money from many people for concealing their felonies.”

The finding of the jury however does not seem to have permanently affected Robert's position, as we find him a prominent man on juries for long after this date. In 1285 he made a visit to Rievaulx Abbey and granted the monks a considerable tract of his land near Bingley.³

The close of the thirteenth century was marked by an outburst of legal warfare between the Abbot of Kirkstall and the Master of St.

¹ Thoresby Society, Miscellanea, vol. i., p. 10.

Leonard's respecting damage said by the former to have been done to part of the property in Bramhope which had been demised by the abbey to the hospital.¹ The house of Kirkstall was now rapidly recovering from the severe financial crisis through which it had passed a dozen years previously, and Abbot Hugh de Grimston, who had guided the Convent successfully through that trying period, was still its chief, and was not the man tamely to see its property impoverished. Whether he was successful on this occasion has not been discovered as yet. But from this time for eighty years the history of the village is almost a blank. Unfortunately the subsidy rolls of the time of Edward III. published by the Thoresby Society² do not show any levy on the inhabitants of Bramhope. It is not until we arrive at the reign of Richard II. that we have any fresh data as to the condition of the vill. In the meantime the epidemic of the Black Death in 1348-9 no doubt affected Bramhope as it did other places, and brought about changes in the social and economic life of the village such as no mere change of owners would effect. On this we can only argue generally: there is no actual information before us. But if we go forward thirty years we have in the poll-tax returns of 2 Richard II., printed by the Yorkshire Archæological Society, a complete view of the state of the population of Bramhope at that time. The village is the last entered on the roll of the collectors for the wapentake of Skyrack. It was not an important place, being smaller than either of the neighbouring villages of Arthington, Adel, or Horsforth, and much smaller than Otley, Harewood, or Headingley; but it was a somewhat more populous place than Pool or Weardley. The number of adult inhabitants (other than paupers, who were not taxed) was 34. They were exclusively engaged in agriculture: no one is mentioned as being in trade. There were of course—the land being all owned by religious houses—no gentry, or franklins, resident in the village: the names are those of workers only: no one is taxed above the minimum sum of fourpence: only one dweller seems to have had a female servant. Each family had its small patches in the fields of the township, cultivated its land in the style which had been in vogue for ages, and paid its rent and rendered its "customworks" to St. Leonard's or Kirkstall. But no doubt the effect of the Black Death was now being felt in full force: labour was in strong demand, and a freer, more prosperous, and more informed generation had arisen after the ordeal of pestilence which had passed through the land.

² Miscellanea, vol. i., p. 86.

Not much is known about Bramhope during the fifteenth century. The name occurs occasionally in some law case, but we have very little material for the history of the vill during this somewhat obscure period. No doubt its connection with the two religious houses was an advantage during the sanguinary wars of the Roses: there was no lord or squire in the place to carry away its youth to fight at Sandal or Towton. It is not until we reach the time of Henry VIII. that the documentary evidence becomes more ample. In the year 1524 we have a subsidy roll for Skyrack, which gives us the names of the three most substantial inhabitants of Bramhope, the only three persons who were assessed in the village. They were Robert Dynlay, Robert Kokson (Cookson), and John Owlred (hodie Holroyd), and the return is interesting as giving the earliest indication of the connection of the Dyneley family with Bramhope, a connection destined to extend over nearly three centuries. The Dyneleys were said to be an off-shoot of the ancient Lancashire house of that name, but the wealth of this branch was probably acquired in Leeds, where Robert's father, William Dyneley, lived in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

Fifteen years after this return was made, the abbey of Kirkstall fell. At the surrender its revenues from Bramhope were as follows:¹

1	6	8	from a tenement in the holding of Robert Cokson— doubtless the above-named Robert of the subsidy.
1	6	8	from a tenement in the holding of Henry Mason. This was a substantial man, the king's collector for most of the Kirkstall revenues from the lands hereabouts.
9	0		the rent of a moiety of a tenement, due by Robert Brown.
9	0		the other moiety, Gilbert Birkenshawe.
8	4		a cottage, &c., Christopher Thornhill.
17	0		a tenement, Richard Diconson.
4	6		a cottage and garden, Thomas Lupton.
8	2		a cottage, &c., John Diconson, junr
16	8		a tenement, Thomas Olred (perhaps a son of John Owlred, of the 1524 subsidy).
10	4		a cottage, &c., John Bonde.
2	0	0	payable by the hospital of St. Leonard's for the mill (with a close of land called Cowclose) under the agreement mentioned on p. 241.

The total was £8 16s. 4d.: then there was 5s. 3d. due annually from several of the above occupiers in lieu of precariae or "boon-works," an ancient service due by the tenants.

The hospital of St. Leonard's was surrendered nineteen days after Kirkstall. If a similar return to the above were available as to its possessions, we should no doubt have a practically complete list of the householders in Bramhope, but the earliest "Minister's Account" relating to the hospital which has at present been discovered is that for 33-34 Hen. VIII., two years later than the Kirkstall account, and it merely recites that the collector does not account for £10 8s. 10d.,¹ late of the ferm of the grange of Bramhope, because it had been granted to the Earl of Cumberland, by letters patent, to be held to him, his heirs or assigns, from the previous Michaelmas. This was Henry, Lord Clifford, who had been created Earl of Cumberland in 1525. He died a few months after obtaining this grant in Bramhope, and the connection of the Cliffords with the place did not continue long. The next earl married Eleanor, daughter of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, and niece of Henry VIII., and the alliance, however honourable to the Cliffords, was also remarkably expensive. Considerable parcels of the lands which they had obtained on easy terms, by the king's favour, after the dissolution, had to be sold to keep up the state which this great marriage entailed. Bramhope was one of the earliest possessions they parted with. It was conveyed by Henry Clifford, second Earl of Cumberland, to William Dyneley in 38 Henry VIII., and the Dyneleys continued at Bramhope until the present century. They were generally a steady and respectable race, strongly tinged with Puritan principles. There is a long pedigree of the family in the Loidis and Elmete, and an account of the old chapel they built, the most interesting relic remaining in the village, will be found in the Bradford Antiquary for July, 1898.

NOTES.

The series of musters, of which the document above prints a part, was taken in the spring of 1539, in view of the threatened war with France. Holinshed thus quaintly records the circumstance :—

“The King being informed that the Pope by instigation of Cardinall Poole had moued and stirred diuers great princes and potentats of Christendome to inuade the realme of England, without all delaie rode himselfe toward the sea coasts, and sent diuerse of his nobles and counsellors to surueie all the ports and places of danger on the coast, where any meet and convenient landing place might be doubted, as well in the borders of England, as also of Wales: in which dangerous places he caused bulworks and forts to be erected. And further, he caused the Lord Admerall, Earle of Southampton, to prepare in a readinesse his nauie of ships for defense of the coasts. Beside this, he sent forth commissions to haue generall musters taken through the realme, to vnderstand what number of able men he might make account of: and further to haue the armor and weapons seene and viewed.” The King reviewed the London musters, and in preparation for this, “eftsoons euer Alderman repaired to his ward, and there put aside all such as had iacks, cotes of plate of maile, and brigandines, and appointed none but such as had white armor, except such as should beare moris pikes, which were no armor but sculles; and there was no strange (although he were a denisine) permitted to be in this muster.”

These musters were general all over the country; most of the returns are preserved among the State Papers. Those for “the libertez of Bradford, commonly callyd Bradfordale,” are printed in the first volume of the Bradford Antiquary. I have referred to them once or twice in the following notes.

The musters were taken by townships, and in a considerable number of cases the constable heads the list. The general arrangements for each township, as a rule, follow the same plan. First come the archers horsed and harnessed, next billmen horsed and harnessed then archers parcel harnessed, followed by billmen parcel harnessed and lastly the archers and billmen having no harness. Sometime however, the three classes of archers come together, and are followed by the three classes of billmen.

The gentry are mostly described as esquires or gentlemen, but not always; e.g. Thomas Gascoigne of Parlington (vol. iv., p. 255

The great majority of the gentry are entered as a few billmen and two spearmen.

Dyneley, gent., of Potter Newton (ix., 10); William Hall, gent., of Austhorpe (ix., 103); Osmundthorp (ix., 107); and George and John of Gawthorp (ix., 302). The two spearmen are Bingley, presumably a "gent.," but not so; and John Tempest, Esq., of Bowling (Bradford

Sometimes there is a summary of the musters (iv., 247), but this is frequently omitted.

Most persons are described as "able," though where persons not able are included, it is not stated which would thus be available for use by others. In the same category we must include the "gentlemen" who occur once or twice, e.g. "Francis Asthorpe wyff" in Leeds Mainriding, both of 1590.

It is not always quite clear whether a "gentleman" or "a billman" (see iv. 256; William of 1590). In most cases it is probably the former.

Practically only two classes of fighting men are mentioned, archers, who are sometimes called bowmen, and billmen. The spearmen, of whom there are very few, are to be distinct from the billmen (ix., 106), and what the precise difference was is difficult to say.

We must not expect to find a too large number of persons or armour; the musters were in the main an idea of the available military strength of the county, and details were not wanted.

ARMOUR.

This remark applies particularly to the musters where a man is described as "harnessed," which implies he had a full equipment, both offensive and defensive. In the dark as to what that equipment consisted of, a jack, a salade, and splints, was considered sufficient (iv., 258, 259, etc.), and therefore the musters were something more; a gorget, probably, and the absence of plate body-armour is special. The breast-plate is mentioned (ix., 101), but it is not clear if the "harnessed" individuals had complete the period, especially among the gentry. Half harness occurs once (iv., 250), but we do not get the items.

At the period of these musters full cap-à-pie armour was rarely used for military purposes, except in pictures, though still worn for jousting. What is known as the "demi-suit" begins early in the sixteenth century. It consisted of a head-piece, either of the closed or open type; a breast-plate and back-plate, with arm-pieces and gauntlets, and long thigh-pieces, tassets or cuisses, to protect the upper part of the leg (see plate, Thoresby Society Miscellanea, vol. iv., p. 123).

The head armour mentioned in the text comprises salades, steel bonnets, and steel caps.

The salade was a close-fitting steel head-piece, with a projection to cover the neck. There was frequently a vizor, either fixed or movable (see plate, as above). The usual head-piece of the period was the morion, which may very probably be included in the term salade.

Steel bonnets.—These were probably very similar to the simplest form of salade, without vizor or attached neck-guard.

Steel caps and hats as a rule approximated in form to the ordinary caps and hats of the period, and consequently varied much in shape. A modern round felt hat, low in the crown, and with a wide brim, more or less flat, will perhaps give the best idea of them. When without brims they are known as scull-caps. In the Bradford-dale portion a "ledder stule" occurs (Bradford Antiquary, i., 220). This is probably an error for scule; and if so, the article mentioned is doubtless a scull-cap of boiled leather, cuir bouilli. An early account of the Battle of Agincourt thus describes the English archers—"les aulcuns portoient huvettes ou capelines de cuir bouilli, et les aulcuns d'osier, sur lesquels avoit une croisure de fer" (Hewitt, Ancient Armour, iii., 524).

Breast-plate.—Only one breast-plate is mentioned in the Skyrack Muster; it belonged to Anthony Birkby of Kippax, and a back-plate is probably implied as well (ix., 101). But, as I have already pointed out, most of those who are described as "harnessed" probably had complete suits, which would, of course, include breast-plates.

The gorget was a steel collar protecting the neck and throat. They continued to be worn until the middle of the seventeenth century, and not infrequently were prolonged into shoulder-pieces or pauldrons.

Jack.—This word is probably used here for any protective covering for the body other than the cuirass. In general these coats or jackets were made of velvet, silk, linen, or other material, strengthened with scales or small plates of steel, iron, or sometimes even horn, fixed to the inside. Among the effects of Sir John Fastolfe (temp. Henry VI.) were "vj jakkes stuffyd with horne," and "j jakke of blakke lynen clothe stuffyd with mayle" (Archæologia, xxi). They were generally without sleeves, and are often called "brigandines."

Gauntlets are too well known to need description. It may be noted, however, that at this period the fingers were for the most part separately articulated. One gauntlet occurs at Swillington-cum-Preston (ix., 258).

Splints.—This term presents some difficulties. It was used for any piece of armour made up of narrow pieces articulated together. Occasionally the whole suit was thus formed, and was known as "a suit of splints." In these musters "splints" probably mean splinted armour for the back and breast. They are here always mentioned in pairs, i.e. a back and a breast piece.

TOWN ARMOUR.

One of the most interesting features of these Rolls is the evidence of public armour, belonging to the township. There can be little doubt that many of the constables who are harnessed or parcel-harnessed were in fact accredited with the public arms and armour, even where it is not so stated explicitly. Difficulties must frequently have occurred in the way of fit, which in many cases would be insurmountable.

The townships possessing armour were not the largest or most important, but rather the other way. The following is a list of them:—

Menston (iv., 251, 252)—horse and harness for a man, common in the town. No details.

Bramhope (iv., 253)—two jacks, two salades, two pairs of splints and two gorgets, in commonalty in the township.

Garforth (iv., 255)—one common jack, salade, and splints, within the said town.

Aberford (iv., 261)
belonging to

Halton (ix., 101)
belonging to

Thorner (ix., 104)

Shadwell (ix., 105)
sheaf of arrows

Menston, it will be noticed, has a public horse as well as public harness. One would like to know more of these township properties. Were they bought out of public moneys for this or some similar occasion? Had they been given or bequeathed by the lord or some unknown public benefactor? Were they provided by the Crown or the county? Unfortunately, there is no means of answering any of these questions.

ARMS.

The only arms mentioned are spears, bills, and bows and arrows. It is remarkable that swords and daggers should be conspicuous by their absence. No doubt the "harnessed" men had one or both, but it is certainly singular that none are specified among the "parcel harnessed." It is possible that they were omitted as not coming within the scope of the muster. This may also account for the absence of guns or pistols of any kind.

Bills.—This term probably includes a variety of weapons, the bill proper, the partisan, the halberd, and others of a similar kind. Originally the bill was simply a scythe fixed straight on a shaft, instead of at right angles. Later on both edges were sharpened, so as to make a better thrusting weapon, and a hook with a cutting edge was added at one side.

Spears.—These weapons are implied in the term "spearman," which occurs at Bingley (iv., 245) and Gawthorp (ix., 302), while spears are mentioned at Headingley-cum-Burley (ix., 106) and Horsforth (iv., 253). They were probably lances of some sort, but it seems impossible to define them more minutely.

Lead Maule.—In Leeds Borough-cum-Kirkgate John Blackburn has after his name "a selet and a ledemen" (ix., 110). I printed this "lede men" under the impression that it possibly meant some sort of a trained leader, a "sergeant-major" perhaps of the period. I have since come to the conclusion that the term should be "lede mau," and means a "maule," mallet or mace, with a leaden head. The dropping of a final "l" after a vowel is a common feature in middle English, and is to this day specially characteristic of northern dialects. Thus we get ba' for ball, ca' for call, Dawtry for Daltry, etc. A short time ago I asked a worthy Sussex countryman if he knew what a "mall" was. Oh, yes, he said, he knew what a "maw" was; it was a big wooden mallet, used to drive pegs into the ground. Hewitt, in his Ancient Armour (iii., 597), quotes an order that every archer should have "a mawle of lead of five foot in lengthe." In the Bradford-dale Muster this weapon is called a "lede-male" (Bradford Antiquary, i., 218).

Archers or Bowmen.—These would all be long-bowmen; there is no mention of cross-bows, which were never popular weapons in England.

Bows and arrows are, of course, implied in the term archer or bowman, and are also mentioned separately. Bows occur without arrows at Ilkley (iv., 248) and Harewood (ix., 300), while arrows without bows are mentioned at Halton (ix., 101) and Leeds (ix., 108, 299).

An early instance of that style of nomenclature which is usually associated with the Puritans of a century later will be found at

VOLUME X.

FOR THE YEARS MDCCCXCVIII, MDCCCXCIX, MDCCCC.

The Registers
OF THE Parish Church of Leeds
FROM 1667 TO 1695.

Seventh and Eighth Books.

EDITED BY GEORGE DENISON LUMB,
One of the Hon. Secretaries of the Thoresby Society and of the Yorkshire Parish Register Society.

LEEDS: 1901.

P R E F A C E .

THE present Volume contains the entries in the seventh and eighth Books of the Leeds Parish Church Registers, extending from the year 1667 to the year 1695. The leaves of the seventh Book measure $14\frac{5}{8} \times 9\frac{5}{8}$ inches, and of the eighth Book $14\frac{1}{4} \times 11$ inches; the leaves of both books are of parchment.

Edward Smith was the Parish Clerk, and wrote the entries down to his death, in December, 1669. He was succeeded by his son, John Smith, who continued in office until his death, in January, 1685. William Kent succeeded, and was Clerk until his death, in July, 1694, when Francis Lupton was appointed.

Many of the entries are much faded, and many have been carelessly written, and crowded between other entries.

The month and year have again been placed in the margin. The Baptismal entries have been rearranged, and the Marriages have been shortened, as shown on pp. 1, 81, 196, and 270.

It may be of interest and assistance to mention that 28 volumes of MS. pedigrees relating to Leeds and district, compiled by the late Wm. Sykes, of Leeds, solicitor, and presented by the late Dr. John Sykes, of Doncaster, an old friend of the editor, are in the Reference Department of the Leeds Public Library. And also that 4 volumes of MS. pedigrees relating to Yorkshire, and compiled by Thomas Wilson, F.S.A., Parish Clerk of Leeds 1735-49, taken partly from Hopkinson's MS. pedigrees, and presented by his son Joseph Wilson, are in the possession of the Leeds Subscription Library, which is also the possessor of three volumes of MS. pedigrees compiled by the late Thomas Norris Ince, of Wakefield, and presented by Dr. John Sykes.

The Baptisms for 1680-2, and the Marriages for 1680-90, were copied by Mr. Samuel Denison, and the remainder of the seventh book by the Editor. Mr. Samuel Rusby copied the Marriages and Burials in the eighth Book, and the Baptisms were copied by Mr. Samuel Margerison and the Editor.

The printed copy has been carefully compared with the Registers. The thanks of the Society are again due to the present Vicar of Leeds, the Rev. Dr. Gibson, a Vice-President of the Society, for his kind permission to copy and publish the Registers, and to Mr. James Warren, the Registrar, for facilitating the work of transcription.

(1) Samuel Ibbetson was Thoresby's partner in the Rape Mill at Sheepscar, which ended so disastrously for Thoresby's financial position. In his Diary for 1698, Thoresby states that he had above £1,000 in Mr. Ibbetson's concern, of which he never got one farthing, "(though his ungrateful son is so grand in his coach) besides I was perpetually dunned by some of their creditors, and once actually arrested."—See Ralph Thoresby, the Topographer, chap. viii.

William Rooke (see ante, p. 27) was the son of Gervase Rooke, of Dranfield, co. Derby, who is described in the pedigree in Jackson's Barnsley, p. 97, as of Barnsley, gent., baptized y, 1613, and buried 19th June, 1693. An abstract of his Will is given below. The descendants of Rooke or Rooke, of Barnsley (Will dated 24th September, 1506, and proved at York), who was married to Joan, daughter of Edward Holdam, of Royston. Another son, William Rooke, above mentioned, Mayor of Leeds 1683, had seven children, of whom Sir William Rooke, knt., Mayor of Leeds 1714, died unmarried 11th November, 1746; and Benjamin Rooke, a Turkey merchant in London, died s.p. 17th March, 1741, at Leeds, having married—first, Martha Burdon, who had two daughters who died young; and secondly, a lady unknown; the other children of William Rooke all died young. Daniel Rooke, the remaining son of Gervase Rooke, had a grandson William Rooke described as of Leeds and Dodworth, and he is now represented by Mr. Charles Staveley of Leeds.—See Rusby's History of the Leeds Parish Church, pp. 163 and 164.

Will of Gervase Rook, of Dranfield, in the county of Derby, yeoman. To my dear and loving wife Elizabeth Rook, all that my messuage in Ridgeway, within the parish of Ekington in the county, with all the closes, lands, &c., thereunto belonging, and now in the possession of George Sickle smith, for her life, and after her decease to Mary Sprentall (daughter of my son-in-law William Sprentall), Sarah Stubbing, Amy Stubbing, and Martha Stubbing (daughters of Thomas Sickle my son-in-law, lately deceased) equally. Unto my son John Rook, of Barnsley, 40s., and to his wife 20s. To my grandchild John Rook £5, to my grandchild Gervase Rook £5, to my grandchild Daniel Rook £5. To my grandchild Rebecca Rook £5, and to my grandchild John Rook £5. Unto my son William Rook, of Leeds, 40s., and to Isabell his wife 20s., and to his sons William and Benjamin 20s. each. To Daniel Rook, of Barnsley, my son, 40s., and to his wife 20s., and to his daughters Ann and Elizabeth £10 apiece, and to his daughter Elizabeth £20. To my daughter Elizabeth Stubbing, of Dranfield, widow, £5, and to my grandchildren Daniel Greenwood and Joseph Greenwood 20s. apiece, and to my grandchild Elizabeth Greenwood, now married to a person whose name I know not, £5. To Mary Clay, widow, of Dranfield, 40s. To Sarah the wife of George Norlige 20s. To my grandchildren—John Sickle 40s., and to his two daughters Ann and Elizabeth 40s. apiece; and to Joshua Sprentall 40s., his wife and child 20s. apiece; and to Nicholas Sprentall £10, and to Daniel Sprentall £30, and Benjamin Sprentall £20. To the poor of Barnsley £6. Rest of personal estate (debts, and funeral expenses being first paid and allowed) unto my dear and loving wife Elizabeth for ever. She sole executrix. Dated 19th April, 1693. Witnesses, Olive X Johnson, Anne X Jam: Donford, Jno. Sprentall. Proved 1st August, 1693, at York."

He was the chief Alderman of Leeds in 1653, and died aged 84. He was the last of the Rooks of Gledhow.—See Thoresby's Ducatus, 2nd edition, pp. 43 and 129.

(1) Lancelot Iveson heads the pedigree in Thoresby's Ducatus, 2nd edition, p. 103, and is aged 58. He probably resided at the Ivy House, York Road, which belonged to the Iveson family. He was the son of Anthony Iveson, of Briggate, see ante, vol. iii., p. 19. The Ivy House was demolished in 1893 by the Leeds Corporation, who purchased it and seventy-eight acres of land of Mr. Lancelot Iveson, the present representative of the family, for £14,000. The conveyance was dated 28th May, 1886, and is made between Lancelot Iveson of the first part, Charles Michell Lloyd Tudor White (Trustees of a Settlement) of the second part, and the Mayor, Aldermen, Burgesses of the Borough of Leeds of the third part.

 Mr. Hammond, minister of Ledsham, p. Lic. [An insertion in Thoresby's writing.]

(1) Thoresby was married at Ledsham, and he gives the following account of his marriage (Diary ed. Hunter. vol. 1. p. 179), which is worth reprinting. "Mr. Thomas Wilson, who accompanied me when I took leave at Sprustey, recommended his wife's sister, Anna, the comely and virtuous daughter of Mr. Richard Sykes, senior lord of the manor of Leeds, &c. I was very solicitous for Divine directions and prayed fervently for guidance in a matter of so great concern to me, both in respect of this world and a future. And it pleased God to hear and answer, that we were joined together in holy matrimony in the parish church of Ledsham, by Mr. Hammond the vicar, my father Sykes living then at Ledsham Hall (now the estate of the pious and Right Honourable Lady, the Lady Elizabeth Hastings), February 25. 1684, a day of mercy never to be forgotten by me or mine, having since that happy moment enjoyed her endeared society thirty five years (in which space it has pleased God to give us six sons and four daughters), and I have by experience found her to be the greatest blessing, she being eminent for piety and devotion, meekness, modesty, and submission, though there has rarely been occasion to try this except in matter of the baptizing and education of our children (after I changed my sentiments as to conformity, of which in the sequel), and singular prudence in a provident management of the family concerns. Notwithstanding our designed privacy, we were met at our return to Leeds by about 300 horse."

(1) The following passes or post-warrants were issued in 1689, in which the officers whose names are given in the registers are mentioned:—March 16, for Col. Matthews and for Col. Richard Leveson to go to Leeds and Wakefield. March 20, for Sir Thomas Gore and Capt. Lindley to go to York or Doncaster, for Capt. Fletcher to go to Penrith, and Capt. Constable to go to Derby. June 14, for Roderick Mackenzie, agent to Sir Thomas Gower's regiment, and Ensign Orfeur to go to Leeds, Wakefield, and York. July 27, for Mr. Orfeur, ensign in Sir Thomas Gower's regiment, to go to Leeds. It is evident that, on account of the Revolution of 1688, troops were quartered in Leeds in 1689 to prevent any risings in the district in favour of the Stuarts.

(1) For his tombstone inscription see Thoresby's Ducatus, 2nd edition, p. 33, which Dr. Whitaker describes as an ingenious turn of panegyric, and far superior to all that precedes or follows it.

(2) Richard Bland, whose burial is here recorded, was baptized at St. Antholin's Church, London, 11 Feb., 1624, married by the Service Book 30 Jan., 1650. He was a Spanish merchant in his younger years, resided at London, but chiefly at his country seat at Hoxton, until he purchased the Manor of Beeston, near Leeds, about 1672, where he died 20 Nov., 1692. His widow died at Beeston Hall, 19 May, 1694. See pedigree in Thoresby's Ducatus, 2nd edition, p. 207; and in the Wilson MSS. in the Leeds Library; and Hunter's Familiae Minorum Gentium, p. 424.

(1) This entry is repeated five lines below, and the two entries confirm the supposition that Ipsa pits was situate on the Hillhouse Bank. In a burial entry for 25 Jan., 1588-9, it is stated that Edward Parker, Hilhousebankes, was slayne in Ibsey cole pittes by the fall of stone upon him. In the Survey of Leeds in 1606, under the heading of "Connyshawe," Alexander Robinson held Conny Shawe Leas, near Hillhousebank, and Christopher Boyes held a close containing 2 acres at Ipsa Pitts.

(2) She was the daughter and co-heiress of Mr. Wm. Marshall, of Moor Allerton. Ducatus, 2nd edition, p. 109.

(1) He was supposed to have been poisoned by gilding the new mace.—Thoresby MS.

(2) Thoresby, in his MS. extracts from the Registers, remarks;—"Memdm y^t y^e Register is very defective, especially in not returning y^e names of such as are Interred in the New Church. I immediatly observed y^e omission of 2 children in one month of my Hon^d Friend Ric^d Thornton, Esq. & of my dear friends M^r Elkanah Hickson & his sister Smith, both interred together, all w^{ch} should be registred in Nov^r, 1694. A memdm at y^e end of y^e Baptisms reflecting upon M^r Mard Curate of y^e old Church, for not returning y^e names of such as he baptized privately, nor the p^res^{en}t or ministers of y^e several parish Chapels, & as for Presbyterian children not one engrossed, bet. of their obstinacy (y^e very words), w^{ch} as M^r Bryan Dixon and I very earnestly requested y^e continuance of y^e favour w^{ch} had been allowed ever since the Restoration til now, but could not obtain it."
